'Snags' Lewis Trio Found Guilty; FBI Probes Jury Fix Attempts

Board Vetoes Additional Anacostia Bridge Work

Planning Group Proposes to Clear Up Bottlenecks at Approaches First

By Dorothy Andrews
Post Reporter

In a surprise action, the Park and Planning Commission last night vetoed any bridge construction across the Anacostia River until bottlenecks at present bridges are cleared up.

At the same time the commission disapproved of the proposal for an East Capitol st. bridge. Significantly, it took no action on a Massachusetts ave. bridge, which John Nolen, Jr., NCPCC planning director, has advocated.

The advisory move left the way open for the Highway Department to follow one of two courses:

1. Seek authority to use the $4,083,000 budgeted for a trans-Anacostia span for other highway work—perhaps for a start on breaking the bridge bottlenecks.

Might Appeal to President

2. Appeal the commission's vote to the President. Once before, Highway Department officials went all the way up to Mr. Truman for approval of a two-bridge system across the Potomac River at 14th st. rather than the single bridge advocated by the NCPCC.

Reporters were admitted to last night's session but were excluded during the voting.

The commission's action followed a protest by Irving C. Root, superintendent of National Capital Parks, who warned the commission to do "first things first" and study plans for a bridge leading to the projected Baltimore-Washington Parkway before approving another Anacostian span.

He added that if such plans were not acted on immediately "I wouldn't be surprised if the parkway will be knocking at our doors before we are ready for it."

Pattern Flow Changed

Root also called for the elimination of traffic bottlenecks at existing bridges, and use of the bridges at full capacity before new ones are undertaken.

He pointed out that the recently completed South Capitol Street Bridge "already has greatly changed the traffic flow pattern" across the existing Anacostia bridges. He opposed further bridge construction until both the South Capitol Bridge and the proposed parkway bridge "have had a reasonable period of operation."

Root termed three of the Anacostia spans "lazy bridges" which cannot perform at full capacity under existing circumstances.

These are the Benning Bridge, with a bottleneck at Minnesota ave. to the east and 15th and H sts. to the west; Sousa Bridge, with the Barney Circle bottleneck; and Anacostia Bridge.

2 Billion Dollars Vast Riches Of U. S. Lost In Philippines

By Dorothy Brandon
NYHT News Service

More than two billion dollars worth of American equipment in the Philippines, originally stockpiled for the invasion of Japan, has been lost, strayed or stolen since V-J Day, and the Government doesn't know what to do about the huge loss, it was learned last night.

Army CID (Criminal Investigation Division) reports describe how much of the materiel, declared surplus after the Japanese surrender, was stolen by and with the connivance of Americans, Filipinos, and others. These thefts occurred at the astounding rate of $500,000 a week, and involved both officers and enlisted men of the United States Army, as well as other nationalities, the reports state.

Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson has ordered an inquiry. The Senate Investigations Subcommittee staff also is making inquiries.

Lewis Accepts Bid to Reopen Talks on Coal

UMW Chief Agrees To Operators Plan Before Receiving It

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

John L. Lewis yesterday pounced upon an invitation by the soft coal operators that contract negotiations be resumed.

Without waiting for official notification of the bid, within four hours of its issuance, Lewis accepted, and offered to meet with industry representatives at the Hotel Statler here at 10 a. m. Wednesday, February 1.

It just so happens that on that day, and at that hour, the miners' leader is due to appear in District Court here to argue against an injunction being sought against the United Mine Workers by Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board.

Acting on the complaint of the coal operators, Denham was the court to restrain Lewis and the union from allegedly coercing the producers into accepting an illegal contract; to bring an end to the three-day work week; and to force Lewis to bargain in good faith with the coal mine owners.

It is believed that Lewis will follow up his acceptance of the new move for coal peace by getting some 90,000 "wildcat" strikers back to work on Monday on the three-day work week. Such a move would tend to prevent or postpone White House intervention in the coal dispute in the face of an imminent national emergency in coal.

John L. wired George H. Love, spokesman for the Northern and Western operators, that he was prepared to negotiate "in good faith," but "without stipulation, qualification or commitment."

Love's offer to reopen negotiations, issued in Pittsburgh, set up certain terms, most of which have been consistently rejected by the union.

Nixon Names White Donor Of Spy Paper

House Member Says Truman Was Told Of Conspiracy But Took No Action

By The Associated Press

A new batch of "pumpkin papers" was produced yesterday by Representative Nixon (R., Calif.), who quoted Whitaker Chambers, admitted wartime courier for a Soviet spy ring, as saying he got them from a high United States Treasury official.

The Californian named the late Harry Dexter White, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, as the author of the notes telling about such things as prewar operations of a United States Navy captain assigned as a "secret liaison man" in England, and United States Treasury plans to bolster China's currency.

Nixon made this disclosure in a House speech in which he charged that the Alger Hiss case was but part of a far-flung subversive conspiracy in Government circles which he said high officials knew about but took no action.

Hiss, former State Department official, has been sentenced to five years for perjury after swearing he never gave any Government secrets to Chambers.

Nixon is a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, which conducted the original investigation of the alleged Communist spy ring working inside the Federal Government.

During that investigation in 1948 White was questioned by the committee and denied Chambers' charges of having passed on confidential information for relay to Soviet agents. White, who died a short time after appearing before the House group, also denied having been a member of the Communist Party or ever doing any disloyal act.

Nixon, however, told the House that he had in his possession photostatic copies of the notes in White's handwriting which Chambers produced from the famed pumpkin hiding place on his Maryland farm, along with the Hiss documents.

"A Government handwriting agent has established that the documents were in Mr. White's handwriting," Nixon said, adding that a substantial part of the information they contained was of a confidential nature.

Nixon released copies of the purported White notes, one of which was dated "1-4-38" and said: "United States Naval Captain Ingels will remain in London until English want to communicate anything to us with respect to Japan boycott or exchange controls. He is to act solely as an agent of communications and not discuss matters."

"State Department believes British moves toward Italy and Germany will reduce substantially."

Wallace Denies H-Bomb Seen Uranium Story Meeting Topic

No Pressure Favored Reds, House Unit Told

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Henry A. Wallace repeatedly denied yesterday that he had sought "directly or indirectly" to influence licensing of uranium shipments to Russia.

The former Vice President and Cabinet member, appearing before the House Un-American Activities Committee at his own request, said he had "absolutely nothing to do" with such shipments during the war. And he added that as far back as 1946 he sensed a "very sinister plot" by unnamed newspapers to involve him in charges of attempting to help Russia develop the atomic bomb.

Wallace, who described himself as "second in command of the Nation" while wartime Vice President, had been accused by Radio Commentator Fulton Lewis, Jr., of clearing uranium shipments to the Soviet Union in 1943 and 1944.

This charge and similar ones he traced to a "lying leak" in President Truman's Cabinet which led to publication in the New York Times September 22, 1945, of a story that he had urged release

Rainy, Cool Today 79.1 Heat Sets Mark for Mid-Winter

By Melvin Altshuler
Post Reporter

It wasn't merely warm in Washington yesterday. It was hot! At 2:20 p. m.—mark the date and hour, boys and girls, you'll boast of it when you're old—it was 79.1 degrees.

Records shattered. Shirtsleeves rolled up like window shades. Washingtonians jollified about their business. The Weather Bureau issued a communique.

It was, the message assured, the hottest, blamst day from November 21 to February 25 the bureau—in 80-odd years of watching thermometers—has ever recorded.

But cooler weather—a 25-degree temperature drop—was due to hit Washington today. Beginning last night, the Weather Bureau forecast cloudy conditions with some rain extending through today. The expected overnight low was 48; today's high—still way above average for Washington in winter—was to be about 54.

In the East, it was like Washington—only less so. In the West, See WEATHER, Page 3, Column 3.

Arms Pacts For Atlantic Are Complete Eight to Be Signed In Ceremony Today; Korea to Get Help

The United States and nine of its cold war allies cleared the decks yesterday for the start of an American rearmament program aimed at bolstering the defenses of the non-Communist world in both Europe and the Far East.

These were the developments: 1. At Seoul, Korea, the American ambassador, John Muccio, signed agreements with the Korean government under which the Koreans will get several million dollars worth of American arms and this country will maintain a military mission there.

2. The United States and Britain after several weeks of argument reached full agreement on the terms under which Britain will share in a billion dollar American arms aid project for cold war allies in western Europe.

3. The State Department announced that all eight of the European arms agreements, including the British, will be signed here today in a ceremony in which Secretary of State Acheson will Congress' investigation of District crime may explode into a full-fledged investigation of Washington gambling operations, it was learned last night.

Representative James C. Davis (D., Ga.) disclosed the special House District Subcommittee assigned to the probe of Washington crime has been discussing the possibility of an intensive gambling investigation.

Davis, chairman of the subcommittee, said a decision may be reached next week on whether to ask the House for sufficient funds to conduct such a gambling study.

Leaving 'Big Mo' As Monument to 'Folly' Is Proposed

Richmond, Va., Jan. 26 (AP)—A group of Norfolk citizens have suggested that the battleship Missouri be left where she is—as a "monument to the folly of trying to operate a Navy with one battleship."

The Mighty Mo has been stuck on a Hampton Roads shoal since January 17.

Delegate W. Carl Spencer got a wire today from some of his constituents who suggested the Virginia General Assembly pass this resolution:

"Be it resolved, that this body respectfully request President Truman to take two battleships, out of mothballs at once and leave the Missouri stranded as a monument to the folly of trying to operate a Navy with one battleship while the world sneers."

Spencer said he would pass the telegram to the house clerk to be read to the house.

Hoover Backs Bill to Curb Slot Machines

FBI Chief Believes Interstate Shipment Ban Would Hit Tycoons

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover believes a ban on interstate shipment of slot machines "would be very helpful" and "would certainly slow up the operations" of the tycoons, the bosses of modern big-time gambling syndicates.

He said "gambling today is the nest-egg of the criminal underworld" throughout this country.

Hoover made the statement at a closed House Appropriations Subcommittee hearing on the 1951 Justice Department appropriation.

Representative Prince H. Preston, Jr. (D., Ga.), who has introduced a bill to ban the one-armed bandits in interstate commerce, asked Hoover for his opinion at the hearing, held January 13 but not reported until yesterday.

Hoover said his personal view was that there "is considerable merit in legislation of that kind."

He went on: "I think that this practice of interstate transportation of this kind of equipment which is the basis for gambling and for other illegal activities in the local communities, if stopped, would certainly slow up the operations of these various gambling groups and syndicates."

"However, in addition to that, I think there ought to be an over-all effort made to impress upon local authorities the imperative necessity of divorcing themselves from the venal activities of the hoodlums of the underworld. In all too many communities the local authorities are subsidized and paid to allow certain of these things to operate."

"Certainly, a bill which would prevent the transportation would help."

He added he approved of a feature of the Preston bill to ban the interstate shipment of slot machines.

Judge Gives Leader 10 to 30 Months In Prison

Billeci Draws 8 To 27, Acalotti 3 To 24; Panel Was Out 19 Hours

By Benjamin Bradlee
Post Reporter

William "Snags" Lewis and two associates were found guilty of operating a numbers lottery at 11:50 o'clock last night by a jury that deliberated 19 hours.

Convicted with Lewis were Attilio Acalotti and Frank Billeci. All were denied bond pending appeal and just before midnight Judge Alexander Holtzoff sentenced Lewis to serve from 10 to 30 months in prison, Billeci, from 8 to 27 months, and Acalotti from 8 to 24 months. Acalotti's term is to run concurrently with his previous 8-24 month sentence for threatening a Government witness in the gambling probe.

Judge Holtzoff thanked the seven men and five women for their "devotion and conscientiousness. Your verdict is a courageous step for law enforcement in this community."

Early yesterday morning, Judge Holtzoff started District Court when he disclosed that three women members of the jury had been threatened Tuesday night and Wednesday morning and one had received a bribe offer of $300 for a "not guilty" verdict.

The FBI immediately was called in to investigate.

The conviction is the first major victory for United States Attorney George Morris Fay who convened a special gambling grand jury in March, 1948, to investigate "Washington's 100 million-dollar-a-year gambling racket."

All the defendants were arrested and indicted as a result of a series of raids directed by Fay last March. Fay described Lewis at that time as a "big shot gambler."

Lewis was branded in the trial as the brains of a 14-million-dollar-a-year gambling syndicate. He lived at 4335 Blagden ave. n.w. Lawton, Okla., Jan. 26 (AP)—Five small children died in flames here today while their mother was at a neighbor's home.

Mrs. Young said she rushed to the door but that one of the children apparently had slammed it, causing a latch to lock the door from the inside. She and neighbors tried to break out the windows but the heat drove them back.

Tri-State Alarm Locates Victim Of Rabid Dog

An alert District detective ended a tri-State search for a woman bitten by a mad dog in South Carolina when he spotted the victim's car in Washington last night.

Tenth Precinct Detective Walter E. Grove, following information received on the interstate police teletype, intercepted Miss Mildred Ferguson, 33, a social-service worker from Louisiana, at 13th and Euclid sts. n.w.

The officer told her the dog which had bitten her on the hand during a stopover in Manning, S. C., was found to have rabies. Miss Ferguson, who is visiting Miss Ida Stinson at 2701 14th st. n.w., wasn't too much worried. She said her skin hadn't been broken. Insurance Tax Bill Approved by House

Day Off

House Move Holds Up FEPC Action

By The Associated Press

A House decision yesterday to dispense with business on February 13 raised a new obstacle to early consideration of an anti-job discrimination bill.

Under House rules, the controversial civil rights measure could have been called up on that day whether or not it is cleared for House consideration by the Rules Committee. It is now bottled up in the committee.

But Democrats and Republicans joined in a move to let Republicans take that day off to attend Lincoln Day dinner celebrations throughout the country.

There was no objection, even from Representative Roosevelt (D., N. Y.), who had said Monday he would try to block any such attempt to keep the fair employment practices bill off the floor.

February 13, as the second Monday of February, was the earliest day on which FEPC could be called up under a rule that House action can be sought on legislation after it is held 21 days by the rules group.

With business canceled for the day, it means that the bill can not be brought up under that procedure until the fourth Monday of the month, February 27.

However, this does not block other possible but unlikely avenues by which the bill might be taken up earlier.

Petitions are being circulated to discharge the legislation from the Rules Committee. These require signatures of a majority of House members.

Also, the Rules Committee could send the bill to the floor. But a move to shake it loose from the committee ran into further delay today.

Because of the illness of Representative Wadsworth (R., N. Y.), Chairman Sabath put off a test vote on the legislation until next Tuesday afternoon. Southern Democrats were predicting that a committee majority would vote against clearing it.

Senate to Vote On 3 Electoral Reform Bills

The Senate was given its choice yesterday of three different constitutional amendments, all designed to junk the Electoral College.

A vote on the proposals has been ordered for next Wednesday afternoon.

Two of the amendments, both calling for direct election of a President and Vice President, were introduced as substitutes for proportional vote measures sponsored by Senator Lodge (R., Mass.) and others.

Senator Humphrey (D., Minn.) introduced one substitute and Senator Langer (R., N. Dak.) the other. The Humphrey amendment would provide for election of the President and Vice President by a direct popular vote. Langer would go a step further and provide for direct primaries as well. This would do away with the national nominating conventions.

Under the Langer proposal, candidates in order to appear on State ballots would be required to file petitions with the United States Secretary of State carrying the signatures of qualified voters in any or all States equaling at least one-tenth of one percent of the total number of popular votes cast in the previous presidential election.

The Lodge measure would abolish the Electoral College, as such, but retain for vote counting only the electoral vote which each State now has. This currently totals 531.

It also would do away with the so-called "unit rule" by which votes in a State receive all of that State's electoral votes.

Instead, each candidate would receive in each State an electoral vote in direct proportion to the number of popular votes cast for him.

Langer criticized both the present nominating system and the electoral college.

"No good reason ever has been shown to me why the people of the United States shouldn't go to the polls and elect a President by direct vote," he said.

Acting with bipartisan dispatch, the House yesterday passed by voice vote a bill to impose 90 million dollars in taxes on the 1947-1949 investment income of life insurance companies.

At the same time, in a mood of polite good humor on both sides, the House rejected a Republican attempt to secure an immediate vote on reduction of excise taxes.

The proposed excise cut, introduced by House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr., would have amounted to 700 million dollars. The attempt, admittedly doomed in advance to failure, was stricken out on a point of order.

GOP forces made the attempt after President Truman called in his special tax message last Monday for excise cuts, in order to demonstrate that they favor quick slashes in taxes on handbags, luggage, jewelry, furs, cosmetics, travel fares and other items.

As explained by Representative Daniel A. Reed (R., N. Y.), the tax levy became necessary because no life insurance company paid any income tax on the income from its life insurance operations for 1947, 1948, and 1949. Under existing law the same thing would occur for 1949.

"There was nothing reprehensible about the failure of these great and small life insurance companies to pay income taxes for those years," Reed said.

In accordance with law, "it was all in accordance with the law. For the 1947 and 1948 deductions allowed by the law to each company exceeded the net investment incomes, so there was no income left to tax."

Representative Walter A. Lynch (D., N. Y.) termed the bill "stop-gap remedial legislation."

"It was made necessary," he said, "by the fact that the formula which was enacted in 1942 to determine the taxable income of life insurance companies has proven wholly unrealistic."

He said the legislation has the support of 95 percent of the life insurance companies and was reported out of the Ways and Means committee with only one dissenting vote.

The question of whether or not the excise taxes should be repealed in an amendment to the insurance bill measure resolved itself into a political argument of whether it was Democrats or Republicans who are most responsible for the so-called luxury taxes.

In calling for excise cuts, Mr. Truman asked that the lost revenue be made up and more in plugging tax "loopholes" in the way of corporation, inheritance and gift taxes.

He laid down a threat to veto any bill that merely cut the excise without augmenting revenue by other taxes.

Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.) of the Ways and Means Committee has scheduled hearings on the President's tax plan starting next Thursday with Treasury Secretary John Snyder as the first witness.

In the past, McMahon has refused even to confirm the committee is considering a new super-weapon. But there were some indications a guarded official statement might be issued after today's meeting.

Bricker, who previously served on the committee in the Eightieth Congress, was quickly approved as his successor so the Republicans would have a full representation at tomorrow's session.

Best Wishes From a Friend of the Family ...

DRUCIE'S WEDDING DAY—President Harry S. Truman (left) offers best wishes to the former Edith (Drucie) Snyder after her marriage yesterday to Maj. John E. Horton at Washington Cathedral. Drucie has been almost a "second daughter" to the Trumans since she was nine. Major Horton lost his post as White House aide when he repeated the marriage vows, formed by the Rev. Malcolm Marshall.

As the organ pealed the strains from Lohengrin, the tall bride, on the arm of her father, proceeded from the north transept to the center aisle.

It was the fulfillment of a romance begun a year ago when Drucie met the young Army officer at a Washington party. The wedding lacked only three days of being an anniversary of that date.

The bride's train, 4½ yards long, 9 feet wide fell into fan shaped folds as she walked up the aisle.

The gown, into which had gone 48 yards of featherweight brocade, was made from material which Secretary Snyder had brought back from Japan. Of pale off-white tone, the bodice featured a high Tudor collar at the back with scalloped satin border down the front fringing into the train. A Juliet cap of narrow strips of satin held the full length illusion veil which was sown with lovers knots of satin.

She carried a cascade bouquet of white lilies, orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Margaret Truman, who had taken a holiday from a concert tour, was maid of honor at this, the first wedding of a Cabinet daughter in almost a score of years, and the biggest event for Washington society this season. She wore forest green nylon marquisette over turquoise blue taffeta, a latticed Juliet cap in turquoise and carried a cascade bouquet of blue lilies and lavender lilies tied with iris ribbons.

The bridesmaids were Mrs. Reid Baldrige, Mrs. John Joseph Harutin, Jr., of St. Louis, Miss Harriet Johnston, daughter of the Eric Johnstons, and Miss Jane Lingo, daughter of Comdr. and Mrs. R. H. Lingo of Washington. They wore similar gowns and carried bouquets like that of the maid of honor.

The dozen ushers who led the bride procession included four fellow officers on White House duty—Lieut. Col. William W. Harvey, Jr., USA; Lieut. Hove D. Moore, USN; Lieut. William Langston, USMC; and Capt. James Shanahan, USA, who'll be a bridegroom himself on February 18 with Miss Patricia Moore as his bride.

In the group also were Maj. William Zimmerman, USA, for Port Knox, a former White House aide; Lieut. Comdr. Harry Carl Allen-Dorfer, USN; Lieut. Col. John R. Deane, Jr., USA; George M. Dorsey, Marvin Braverman, Robert H. Denton, Marvin Coles and George Herkan, all of Washington.

The bridegroom, in cutaway adorned with boutonniere, had as his best man Craig Stevens of Los Angeles. Mrs. Stevens, the screen star Alexis Smith, also was here for the wedding.

About 2000 guests attended, and 1200 went on to the reception which followed at the Chevy Chase

Club. Champagne flowed freely from three bars set up on the first floor of the club.

The President and Mrs. Truman who motored back to Blair House following the ceremony arrived at the club shortly after 7 o'clock. The President in the same dark blue suit which he had worn to the wedding and Mrs. Truman wearing a black satin gown, with a fur cape and a tiny green hat trimmed with pale pink roses, the same costume in which she had appeared earlier.

The bride received kisses from the Chief Executive and "Aunt Bess," who also kissed the bridegroom.

Mrs. Snyder, heading the receiving line, wore toast colored net with a tulle hat to match.

Picking up her train the bride slid into the arms of her husband to open the dance as Sidney and his orchestra struck up with the waltz, "Beautiful Lady," Secretary Snyder cut in immediately and then Mr. Horton, the bridegroom's father.

But first Drucie and her Johnnie had to cut the four-tier wedding cake which was set up on a flower-decked table beneath a green canopy studded with white roses.

Among guests at wedding and reception were the Vice President and Mrs. Barkley, the Secretary of State and Mrs. Dean Acheson, the Norwegian Ambassador and Mme. Munthe Morgenstjerne, the Belgian Ambassador, Baron Robert Silver-eruy, the French Ambassador and Mme. Bonnet, the Postmaster General and Mrs. Jesse Donaldson, former Ambassador to Russia.

Joseph Fulbright, Mr. and Mrs. John Steelman, Representative and Mrs. Albert Thomas, the British Ambassador and Lady Franks, Under-Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Edward H. Foley, the Icelandic Minister and Mme. Thors, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ross, the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Charles Brannan, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Mrs. Philip Graham, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Biffle, Mrs. Morris Cafritz.

4. The department also announced that President Truman will formally approve today the plan for an integrated defense of the North Atlantic area and issue an executive order making it effective as a basis for carrying out the arms program.

By late next week, officials said, military supplies should begin moving from inland warehouses and arsenals in this country to seaboard points for shipment overseas. The first shipload of arms probably will get under way by the middle of February, they said.

The European nations which will sign agreements and receive assistance in addition to Britain are France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, Italy, Norway and Denmark. According to the law which Congress passed last fall authorizing the rearmament project as a means of strengthening western Europe against possible Russian aggression, both the making of the agreement and the certification of the general defense plan are required in order to carry out the full program.

The Europeans also agree that they will engage in such "mutual aid" among themselves as they are capable of.

It was in connection with the retransfer provision and the mutual aid principle that the United States and Britain became involved in negotiations which delayed by at least two months the actual signing of all the European agreements.

The original American proposal on retransfer was interpreted by the British, as it had been earlier by the French, to mean that they could not even send military materials of their own to their forces in colonial areas without American permission. On their strong objection, the State Department agreed to rewrite that provision to bar only the unauthorized transfer of American arms.

In connection with the mutual aid section of the agreement, the British obtained assurances from the American Government that they were not undertaking any new commitments to help their western European allies.

The first of the Korean agreements was officially described as providing for the maintenance of a military advisory group which has been in the Far Eastern country since last July 1. It states that the purpose of this group is to assist in training a Korean security force and in helping that force learn the use of United States armaments. The Koreans obligate themselves to pay the operating expenses of the group.

The second agreement provides that the United States will supply and the Koreans will receive quantities of American arms and that the Koreans will use them strictly for the purposes for which they are supplied—that is to strengthen the defenses of the country. Korean arms will be furnished.

Joint Chiefs Approve Mission to Formosa

Earns $20 a Month
Clerk to Wed Hirohito's Daughter

Tokyo, Jan. 26 (AP).—Princess Kazuko Takamomiya, 20-year-old daughter of Emperor Hirohito, was betrothed today to a $20-a-month government clerk, son of a Shinto priest.

The clerk is Toshiyuki Takasakasa, 26, only son of the chief priest of Tokyo's Meiji Shrine and a cousin of Dowager Empress Sadako.

The prospective bridegroom learned of his good fortune at 1 p. m. today when the vice chief chamberlain of the imperial household called on him and stated:

"Their majesties, the Emperor and Empress, would like to have their daughter, the Princess Kazuko Takamomiya, married to Honorable Takasakasa. What are his feelings on the subject?"

"I accept," replied Takasakasa. The Takasakasa, father and son, held an unprecedented press conference in the 61-year-old priest's small home.

Blushing down to his collar, Takasakasa said he had seen his fiancée "about six times" since they first met in November, but marriage negotiations were under way before that.

The elder Takasakasa said "of course" the couple had never been unchaperoned, never gone dancing nor even attended a movie together.

Young Takasakasa was asked if he was in love with the Princess, most attractive of Hirohito's four daughters.

"That feeling will come," he said.

Reds to Free 2 Americans, Consul Feels

Kobe, Japan, Jan. 26 (AP).—United States consular official just out of China today expressed belief the Communists eventually would free two American servicemen they have held for 15 months.

"When Britain has set up effective relations with Red China, I think we will get Bender and Smith out," said Consul General Carl O. Hawthorne of San Francisco. He came here aboard the freighter Flying Arrow after closing the Consulate at Tsingtau.

The prisoners are Marine M/Seg Charles C. Bender of Cincinnati and Navy Chief Electrician William C. Smith of Long Beach, Calif.

Capt. David Jones of the Flying Arrow tried to negotiate their release when his ship put into Tsingtau after being blocked by Nationalist shellfire outside Shanghai.

Jones disclosed he had been authorized to spend up to $25,000 if the Communists wanted ransom, but was told money did not enter into it.

Jones said a Communist official said the men could be released "very quickly" if the United States would make a "proper" diplomatic request.

Rebels Invade Jakarta, but Are Repulsed

Jakarta, Indonesia, Jan. 26 (AP).—Rebels under turncoat Dutch Capt. Paul (Turk) Westerling today fought a two-hour street battle with Republican troops in the heart of Jakarta, the Indonesian capital, before they were forced to withdraw under machine-gun fire.

At least seven men were killed and many wounded.

The renegade leader, who did not take part in the raid, told the United Press at an undisclosed location that large-scale fighting would break out soon all over west Java. He predicted he would win.

The rebels forced their way into police barracks near the main shopping area and at first beat back Republican troops, but as reinforcements arrived they were overpowered and withdrew.

Military sources said five Republican soldiers and two rebels were killed. They said the Republicans captured eight irregulars, including a Dutch army deserter. The others were Indonesians.

Westerling said he was "not trying to set myself up as a war lord . . . I'm not trying to form my own government."

He said his only goal was to rid the Republican army of its "Japanese influence" and help create a stable army for Indonesia.

Defense Secretary Louis A. Johnson and Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday that they had recommended sending a military mission to Formosa to determine what help the Chinese Nationalists need to save that island from Communist invasion. This was reported by committee members.

Committee Chairman Tom Connally (Tex.) said that Johnson and General Bradley warned the committee that Formosa in "enemy" hands would be a menace to the American defense line in the western Pacific.

This supported the suspicion of Republican members that President Truman had overridden the suggestions of the military establishment in his policy declaration of January 5 in which he shut the door of any further military aid or advice to the Chinese Nationalists, he President had accepted the counsel of Secretary of State Dean Acheson, who argued against "foolish adventures" such as involvement in Formosa.

Secretary Johnson and General Bradley were summoned at the request of Republican Senators who wanted to know what weight President Truman attached to the military opinion before announcing his hands-off-Formosa policy. Senator Connally objected, insisting that President Truman had stated the national position and it was too late to change anything. He consented only after Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, Republican of Michigan, declared on the Senate floor that the views of the defense establishment were "pertinent and indispensable."

At the close of yesterday's meeting, Senator Connally said that the President's decision had been "accepted" by the Defense Department before Mr. Truman's announcement.

"Both said that at no time have the joint chiefs of the Department of Defense recommended any occupation of Formosa by the United States," he said.

"They also expressed the view that, while Formosa is of strategic significance to the United States in the hands of an enemy, in the defense establishment were 'pertinent and indispensable.'"

Other Senators present at the meeting said that Secretary Johnson and General Bradley maintained that the defense establishment would not warrant the use of our armed forces to occupy it.

They also reported that the Defense Chiefs recommended sending an "exploratory" mission to Formosa and that this recommendation was carried to the December 20 meeting of the National Security Council.

These sources said that General Bradley told the committee that General of the Army Douglas MacArthur believed that Communist seizure of Formosa would imperil this Nation's defense line. They indicated, however, that General MacArthur favored stronger action than that proposed by the Defense Department.

Exposure Case Delayed
A hearing on an indecent exposure charge against Frederick Schroeder, 26, 855 Geranium st. n.w., was continued indefinitely yesterday in Takoma Park Police Court to permit him to receive psychiatric treatment. Schroeder was accused of exposing himself on a Takoma Park street corner Tuesday.

Midwest and Northern Plains, however, winter was at its worst.

California's citrus crop was endangered by the winter's fourth below-freezing cold wave. In the Midwest, cold front met warm front and produced winds so fierce that a tornado struck in Nomenec, Ill.

Tragedy was averted when a passenger train was flagged before it reached a debris-strewn stretch of track.

Spokane, Wash., had a few records—2 below zero, a total snowfall in January of 54 inches.

Subzero weather nipped the Dakotas, Minnesota, Iowa and Wisconsin.

That cold weather, coming from the Northern Plains, was due to cool off Washington and an East that enjoyed a January May day.

Meantime, Washington sported itself with such phenomena as Japanese quince trees blooming on the White House grounds. There was even a telephone call to The Washington Post about Japanese beetles—well, one—appearing in nearby Maryland.

Nearby Maryland was the scene of 40 unseasonal brush fires—27 in Prince Georges County, 13 in Montgomery County, Alexandria had 4 brush fires, and Fairfax 2.

Different 28 Years Ago
Compare all this to Washington 28 years ago.

At 4:20 p. m., the day of January 27, 1922, it began to snow. It continued to snow until just past midnight January 28. By then, 28 inches had fallen.

The weight of that tremendous snow was blamed—remember—for the dreadful collapse of the Knickerbocker Theater on the 28th, when 96 lives were lost.

Washington yesterday wasn't the only city with a record-shattering report. The balmy East reported new marks for January in New York City—70.5 degrees, and Boston—71.

Quite facetiously, the Jamestown, N. Y., Chamber of Commerce invited the Governors of Florida and California for a winter vacation. It was 71 degrees, it seems, at nearby Lake Chautauqua.

California's Governor might have enjoyed it, with temperatures in the twenties. Not so the executive of Florida: Tampa and Ocala had 84 degrees.

The mercury climbed consistently here from 56 at 5:30 a. m. into the seventies by 11 a. m., then fell after the 2:20 p. m. reading of 79.1.

Just for fun, the Weather Bureau put a thermometer out in the sun at 3 p. m. While the temperature was 79 in the shade, it was 82 in the sun. And bureau experts opined that in some Washington streets, if you were wearing a black suit, your clothing would have registered as much as 89 degrees in the sun.

It was pretty much the same in Richmond, Va., and at Annapolis, Md., in the Maryland capital, a seafood merchant named Pete Evans reported oyster sales were way down while the local weather bureau said temperatures reached 77.

The Washington Weather Bureau's communique pointed out that yesterday was the fifth day this month thermometers had reached 70 and higher and the seventh day daily records were broken.

The official explanation was that the cold front out West had forced a southwest circulation of air into the East. The warm current brought to the Atlantic Seaboard came from the Gulf and Florida Coast and the Southern Atlantic.

In Washington and for Washington, the explanation was that this warm weather had built up, and up, and up.

This diagnosis was confirmed by Jerome Namias, chief of the Weather Bureau's extended forecast section. He maintains that while there will be comparatively warm days to come in Washington, winter will arrive yet.

"I am advising my friends," he cautioned, "not to toss away their overcoats."

3 Killed in India As Rioting Mars Independence Day
New Delhi, India, Jan. 26 (AP).—At least three persons were killed and scores injured today as Communists demonstrated against India's new independent government.

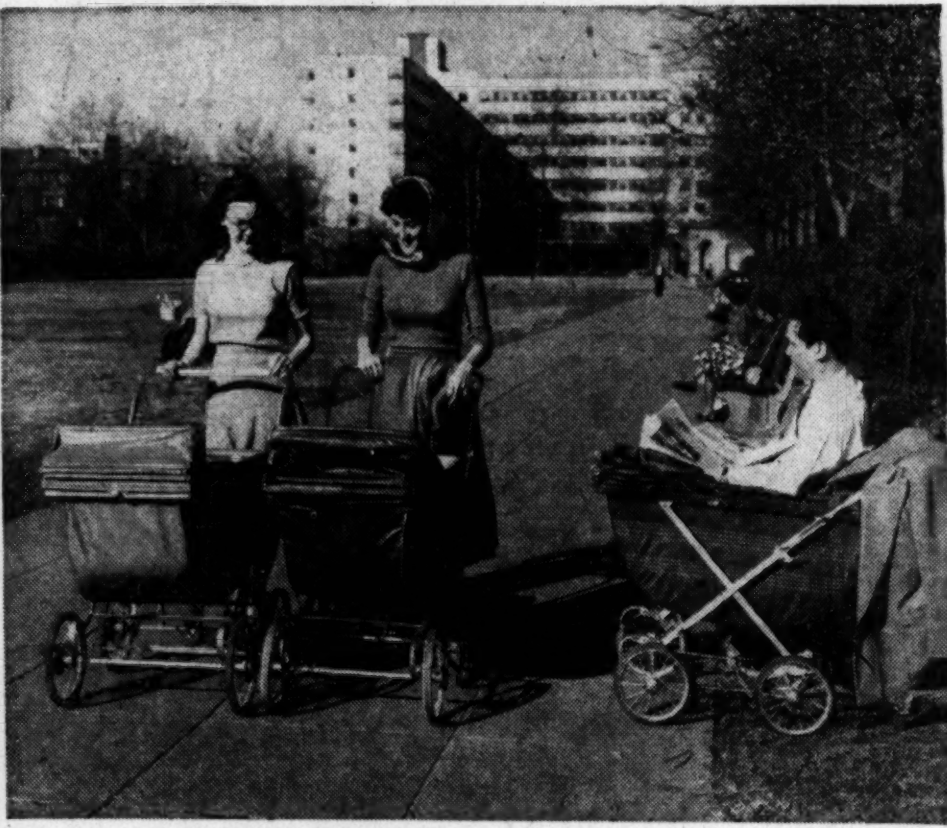

Rioting in Calcutta and Bombay marred Indian celebration of the country's first day as an independent republic. In Hyderabad, a Hindu fanatic tried to assassinate the wealthy Nizam, reputedly the world's wealthiest man.

In Calcutta, at least three were killed when police fired on a group of bomb-throwing Communists attempting to hold a protest meeting. Demonstrators tossed bombs at police stations and set fire to several trolleys and buses. Streetcar service was partly suspended. Sixty persons were arrested.

India became an independent republic this morning in a ceremony at New Delhi's Government House, marking its official break from 178 years of British rule.

Bonn Ratifies Pact For ECA Assistance
Bonn, Jan. 26 (AP).—The West German Parliament today ratified the Economic Cooperation Administration agreement between the United States and the Federal Republic. Only the small Communist delegation was opposed.

The agreement provides for Marshall Plan aid to West Germany until 1952 and proposes unification of currencies in West Europe, either by a common West European currency or by making West European money convertible at fixed rates.

STROLLING IN THE PARK YESTERDAY— Mrs. Lucille Haddock (left) of 2325 15th st. n.w., and Mrs. Sylvia Levenson of 1433 Belmont st. n.w., give their babies a sunning yesterday in Meridian Hill Park as the temperature reached a record 79. The gentleman in shirtsleeves, on the bench, reads his newspaper. This scene was repeated throughout the city that yesterday was the fifth day this month thermometers had reached 70 and higher and the seventh day daily records were broken.

Why? The official explanation was that the cold front out West had forced a southwest circulation of air into the East. The warm current brought to the Atlantic Seaboard came from the Gulf and Florida Coast and the Southern Atlantic.

Senate Committee's Attitude
McCloy told The Washington Post that in addition to this consideration, there was a request by the Special Senate Investigating Committee headed by Senator Clyde R. Hoey (D., N. C.). The committee asked that death sentences not be executed, McCloy said, until it had had an opportunity to review the matter.

McCloy said he believed the committee was preparing to cease its interest in the matter.

How "sweet and gentle" was Mrs. Chiang? Don't miss "This I Remember," by Eleanor Roosevelt, for a close-up portrait of Mrs. Chiang when she visited the White House. In The Sunday Washington Post.

McCloy Seeks To Settle Fate Of Nazi Guilty
A final determination of the fate of 16 Nuernberg war criminals whose death sentences have not yet been executed is one of the purposes of his visit here, United States High Commissioner to Germany John J. McCloy disclosed yesterday.

A stay of the death sentences imposed in 1947 and 1948 has been granted the defendants, McCloy said, for two reasons—one an anticipated Supreme Court ruling and the other an expected decision by a congressional investigating committee.

The principal war criminal under sentence is Oswald Pohl, chief of the economic and administrative department of the SS, who was in direct charge of the administration of all Nazi concentration camps.

The court found that Pohl was on the same level as Reinhard Heydrich. His immediate and only superior was Heinrich Himmler himself. Pohl, according to the court, was in direct charge of the demolition of the Warsaw ghetto, "the most complete task of destruction of a modern city since Carthage met its fate many years ago."

Ohlendorf Included
Others of the defendants in the second trial at Nuernberg were commanders and subordinate officers of the so-called SS "Einsatzgruppen." These "liquidated" approximately one million Jews and other persons. The principal defendant in this case was SS Gen. Otto Ohlendorf, who admitted his unit had slaughtered approximately 90,000 Jews in southern Russia.

Throughout the case as the court declared, "the charge of purposeful homicide . . . reaches such fantastic proportions and surpasses such credible limits that believability must be bolstered with assurance one hundred times repeated."

Most of the defendants, according to State Department sources, now have appeals for habeas corpus either filed or pending. A Supreme Court decision on the "Einsatzgruppen" war crimes case, a State Department spokesman said, is expected to clear up once and for all whether such an appeal can be entered here.

Senate Unit To Get Replies By Matthews

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

The Senate Armed Services Committee yesterday decided to recall Secretary of the Navy Francis Matthews for additional questioning on his ouster of Admiral Louis Denfeld as chief of naval operations.

Matthews is expected to appear Monday or Tuesday and at least part of the session will be behind closed doors.

Chairman Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) gave in to Republican demands that Matthews appear and clarify some of the prior statements regarding the Denfeld removal. He stated that the Navy Secretary already had told him that he'd be "delighted" to testify.

After the committee approved a batch of nominations, Tydings suggested adjourning, as Democratic members were due at a caucus. But Senator William Knowland (R., Calif.) offered a formal motion that "Secretary Matthews be invited before the committee to clear up the testimony previously given."

He suggested the clerk could poll the committee by phone and avoid a delay. Tydings told his colleagues that a vote to call Matthews would not be necessary. He said he'd invite the Secretary to appear at "a very early date."

Prior to the meeting, Republican members had said they had enough Democratic votes to force Matthews' appearance. The Marylander proposed that the Navy chief be questioned when other defense officials appear to "brief" the Senators on current problems. Senator Lyndon Johnson (D., Tex.) broke in to suggest that Matthews be asked to appear first, and Knowland added "within the next week."

Tydings declared he'd "do his best" to arrange it for Monday or Tuesday.

White Named As Spy Aid

European fear of war in the near future.

"If Japan repeats another incident like the 'Panay' incident (bombing of USS Panay), Treasury machinery is all ready to embargo Japanese imports into United States and freeze her dollar balance. This was done at the President's orders. It remains unknown outside of Treasury."

"I have heard nothing further as to Captain Ingersoll's mission in England beyond my earlier explanation. So far as the Treasury is concerned he is supposed to be there in case of another incident with Japan. In that event he would serve as a secret liaison man between England and United States unknown to anybody as to nature of his mission."

Bachman of the Swiss National Bank said (2/15/38) that the Japanese recently put out feeler to some of his banks for a loan for industrial development in Manchoukuo. However, his bankers had not sufficient interest in such a proposition even to submit it to the National Bank for consideration and possible approval."

Nixon said he was bringing the White notes into the open because "I think the public is entitled to see and consider the evidence."

He charged the administration with "inexcusable inaction" in not dealing with the so-called spy ring.

Nixon claimed that President Truman had access to a secret memorandum dated November 25, 1945, saying the Soviets had an agent in this country "who was an assistant" to the late Edward R. Stettinius, who was then Assistant Secretary of State. Nixon declared that Alger Hiss was Stettinius' assistant at the Yalta conference in February, 1945.

Prepared by Agent

Nixon went on to say that this memorandum was prepared by a United States Intelligence agent and was based on information given by Igor Guzenko, the Soviet code clerk in Canada who supplied information to the Canadian government which led to the famous espionage trials there.

Nixon contended that Administration officials disregarded such information and attempted instead to block further investigations of the Hiss case.

He told the House that as early as December 5, 1948, his committee had learned from "unimpeachable sources" that Justice Department officials were considering prosecuting Chambers in order to avoid bringing Hiss to trial.

Truman Draft Power to Hinge on D. C. Attack

Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee proposed a new compromise draft plan yesterday—empowering the President to order inductions only if Washington suffered an atomic blitz.

His proposal partially meets military desires to vest mobilization authority in the Executive branch of the Government because of expressed fears that the Nation's Capital would be the first target in another war. Congress might not be able to function in such case, they warn.

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service director, joined Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and J. Lawton Collins, Army chief, yesterday in voicing such fears.

Hershey told the committee that he had "reservations" about naming Congress as the sole authority to order inductions, because "I'm not so sure we're going to have orderly government" in a war emergency.

The Administration and Congress have been at odds over legislation to extend the selective service law for another three years.

The present law expires June 24. President Truman asked a simple extension of the act. Several House members said they'd favor a standby draft with no actual inductions unless they were authorized by Congress.

Mr. Truman and the Joint Chiefs came back with a statement that a standby draft was satisfactory, but that the President as well should have authority to call men if he and the National Security Council felt that international conditions warranted it.

Congressmen objected that they could act in a few days in an emergency, even if not in session. Bradley and Collins argued that this might not be possible due to enemy action. Then yesterday Vinson gave a bit more.

Keep control over use of the draft in Congress' hands with only one exception—allow the President to act only when the "seat of Government is under attack" said the committee chairman.

Administration witnesses finished their testimony yesterday. On Monday opponents will be heard.

Push for Uranium Denied by Wallace of atomic information to Russia. This story was denied promptly by Mr. Truman, he said, and added that the President told his Cabinet the person responsible for the "leak" would not attend any more "top level" meetings. In reply to a committee question, Wallace said he didn't think it would be proper to name the person suspected.

Under a barrage of questions by Representative Case (R., S. Dak.), Wallace reiterated that the matter of sharing the bomb secret with Russia "did not come up" at the meeting. Finally he referred to a memorandum and said former Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson had suggested an interchange of scientific knowledge with all United Nations members. Wallace said he supported this suggestion, because "there are no secrets" in science but that he was "dead against" giving information on engineering know-how to any country.

He added that his support of Stimson's suggestion included the proviso that United States scientists be sent to work in Russian laboratories and Russian scientists be brought here to work.

Generally a calm and unruffled witness under the hammering of Committee Counsel Frank S. Tamm, Jr., and committee members, Wallace showed occasional flashes of anger. And once he made directly conflicting statements which were not later reconciled.

At one point he said Gen. Leslie R. Groves, head of the Manhattan Engineering District which built the atomic bombs, told him that "he was going to chase the foreigners out of the uranium business." Then, in the next sentence, Wallace said, "He (Groves) said nothing, and to the best of my knowledge, nobody said anything about uranium."

"Prefunctionary" Job

Although the Board of Economic Warfare, of which he was ranking member, passed on export licenses for the Lend-Lease Administration and other agencies, Wallace said this was a "ministerial" and perfunctory operation. He had no personal knowledge, he emphasized, of any shipments of uranium or heavy water to any country.

Under questioning he said he knew Boris Pregel, president of the Canadian Radium & Uranium Corp. of New York, which supplied two large shipments of uranium compounds to Russia in the spring of 1943.

But, he explained, he did not meet Pregel until December 27, 1943. Later, he said, he asked Pregel to translate some speeches into Russian, which brought them together more intimately for a brief period.

Reads Statement

In a prepared statement, which he read in part, Wallace labelled charges of using his influence to push uranium shipments to Russia "not so much an attack on me as it is upon the Democratic Party and President Roosevelt." During his service on the BEW, he said, he was "neither responsible nor aware" of shipments to Russia of atomic materials.

FBI Director Reports Heavier Work Load

McGrath Reports Noted Trials Costing U. S. Large Sums

Those trials which make the headlines cost the Government a pretty penny.

Attorney General McGrath disclosed, in appropriations hearings made public yesterday, how much it cost for some recent important trials—those of Alger Hiss, Axis Sally, Tokyo Rose, Judith Coplon and others.

Here are some figures, exclusive of the costs of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the cost of operating the courts:

Herbert J. Burgman, convicted of treason for wartime broadcasts for the Nazis, $36,000.

Mildred E. (Axis Sally) Gillars, also convicted of treason for broadcasting for the Nazis, $55,000.

The Alger Hiss case "up to now" (McGrath testified January 11), $58,000.

The Judith Coplon case, $75,000.

Miss Coplon, a former Justice Department worker, was convicted here on charges of removing security secrets from Government files with the intent to give them to Russia.

The trial of 11 top American Communists in New York, $128,000.

They were accused of conspiring to overthrow the Government by force and were convicted.

McGrath said the end of spending is not in sight on the month-long Communist conspiracy case. One little item: $50,000 as the Government's share of the cost of printing the record.

By The Associated Press

The FBI says the job of protecting the country from spies is greater now than at the peak of World War II.

Asking for an enlargement of his force, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said in a congressional hearing that the end of the war served only to balloon the work of his agents in protecting the Nation's internal security.

Hoover's report was contained in House Appropriations Committee hearings made public yesterday.

In the same hearing, Immigration Inspector Watson B. Miller said there are approximately three million aliens in the United States—some 3500 of them deportable and free under court bond, but whom no other nation will accept.

Assistant Commissioner W. F. Kelly said border inspectors found it almost physically impossible to carry out required examinations at border stations.

As one example of the problem, he explained there are between 8000 and 11,000 persons in Canada who are officially listed by the Canadian government as subversive.

Kelly estimated there are thousands of aliens now in the United States unlawfully, and of whom the Immigration Service has no knowledge.

Hoover said internal security problems are growing steadily, with the FBI's work load at a record high, and declared:

"The need, I think, is paramount to control the dangers that are inherent in Communism and the subversive activities of foreign-inspired espionage groups that are operating in this country."

Hoover said "one of the effective means" of meeting the security menace has been limited wire tapping.

Although it has been subjected to strong criticism, he defended wire tapping as a modern technique necessary in combating subversion.

"The facts," Hoover added, "contradict the hysterical utterances of those who would have us believe that wire tapping by the FBI is unrestricted and is utilized on a wholesale scale."

Then, repeating what he has previously stated, Hoover said the FBI has less than 170 taps in existence and all of them confined to internal security cases.

Major crime is also on the uptrend, Hoover reported. He said that in the first nine months of 1949 the number of major crimes was nearly 12 per cent larger than in the last prewar year.

Hoover asked for $57,400,000 to run the Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year starting July 1. This is an increase of $594,859 over the current fiscal year.

Part of the added funds would go toward another 677 employees, of which 324 would be special investigating agents.

One Seized in Plot To Dynamite Tower

Charlotte, N. C., Jan. 26 (AP)—Sterling L. Hicks, 51, was arrested today on charges of conspiring to dynamite radio station WBT's 435-foot transmitter tower. He denied guilt.

Hicks, business manager of Charlotte local, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL), was one of 10 union men discharged by WBT last September.

COPLON—From Page 1 Case Outlined For Spy Jury

related to the USA or any department."

Palmer likewise contended it was love rather than espionage that brought Miss Coplon up from Washington to meet the Russian when she worked for the Justice Department and he for the United Nations.

But he said the 28-year-old brunette was shocked and her love cooled when she learned that Gubitchev was married.

"We'll show," Palmer went on, "that she was friendly with everybody. Five feet in height, always smiling, she is the little kitten type..."

"She never took from the files of the FBI or any other Government agency anything she had no right to take..."

Whearty Reviews FBI's Case

Whearty painstakingly reviewed the FBI's sometimes unsuccessful efforts to shadow Miss Coplon and the Russian on three occasions in New York.

He recalled that when she was arrested her handbag contained, among other things, portions of FBI reports relating to the Soviet Embassy as well as a decoy memo given her earlier that day to see what she would do with it.

The decoy paper, said the prosecutor, gave false information to the effect that the FBI had informants in high position within Amtorg, the Soviet trading organization. He said it also gave true information about an explosion-measuring device called a geophone.

"The geophone information was selected so that, if it got into the hands of the Russians, it would not harm the United States," he said.

One point of contention between the defense lawyers apparently was settled in a private conference before today's session opened.

Palmer did not, as he had announced he would, refer in his address to last summer's Washington trial.

Officials of Bridges' Union Favor Compliance With T-H Law

San Francisco, Jan. 25 (AP)—National officers of Harry Bridges' CIO union tonight reversed themselves and urged compliance with the Taft-Hartley Act, "to meet any raiding attack from AFL or (other) CIO unions."

The union—the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's—has been one of the most bitter foes of Taft-Hartley. Its officers have refused to sign non-Communist affidavits as required by the act.

Harry Bridges, on trial here on a perjury charge, is president of the union.

Louis Goldblatt, international secretary-treasury of the ILWU, announced the action in this statement:

"The international officers and the national organizing committee of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union are recommending to the executive board and locals of the ILWU compliance with the Taft-Hartley Act."

"The officers and organizing committee have decided on this step so as to meet any raiding attack from AFL or CIO unions. If necessary, compliance with Taft-Hartley will be used to retaliate in kind against any such raids."

"We still hold to the belief that there are no benefits to be gained under Taft-Hartley. Every victory won by this union has been won in spite of Taft-Hartley."

"The officers of the ILWU believe, however, that the time has come when we can use compliance as a means to expose and defeat the enemies and the splitters within the labor movement."

"The officers' proposal is, of course, subject to the approval of the national executive board and the locals of the ILWU."

Goldblatt declined to elaborate any portion of his statement.

Woman Is Convicted In Dog Quarantine

In the first hearing held under Montgomery County's new dog ordinance, Mrs. William Castell, 7702 Takoma ave., Takoma Park, was yesterday given a $10 suspended fine in Takoma Park Police Court for permitting her dog to run loose.

Last November, the county put a quarantine on dogs, requiring owners to keep animals confined or on a leash.

Calm Reigns In Strike at Chrysler Plant

Detroit, Jan. 26 (AP)—A "cooling-off" period brought calm today along the Chrysler strike front.

There were no moves on any side to bring about peace talks between the company and the CIO United Auto Workers. The attitude seemed to be: "wait a few days."

Waiting on picket lines and at home were 85,000 striking hourly-rated workers—the men who make Chrysler, Dodge, De Soto and Plymouth cars. Also idle were 23,000 workers at Briggs Manufacturing Co., which supplies bodies for Chrysler Corp. cars.

The Briggs workers were laid off yesterday within a few hours after Chrysler workers walked out in a dispute over pensions.

E. M. Sconyers, Federal mediator, said the Government would try to bring the parties together again "at the first opportune moment."

No Plans for Overtures

Neither the company nor union had any plans to make overtures to the other. Both said, however, they were ready to meet again at a call from Government mediators.

Negotiations broke off just before the strike. The two sides were agreed on the principle of a $100-a-month pension plan, but could not agree on how to operate it.

The UAW insisted Chrysler should pay a set sum, written in the contract, into a joint trust fund from which pensions would be drawn. The company maintained it should pay pensions directly as they fell due, keeping sole control of the plan.

Chrysler rejected the union's demand that pension and health insurance benefits should be specifically set at 10 cents hourly per worker.

Huge Assessment

To finance its battle, the union appeared set to levy a huge membership assessment, one of the largest in the history of American labor.

The union estimated that at least nine million dollars could be raised this way if the strike dragged on.

Activity in the strike centered tonight around the local kitchens. Kitchens were set up to feed pickets and needy families. Gasoline playing automobiles. Welfare committees were issued to those workers hit hardest by the strike.

Paul, resting in bed after a dynamite cap explosion at school inflicted cuts and burns on his arms, legs, abdomen and chest, sighted the burning cap in a locker and was running to throw it out a door when the cap exploded. Police said his action saved several students from possible injury.

Small groups of pickets continued their endless March around the company's main plants. In some cases they dwindled to a handful.

A minor picket line dispute broke out at the main Dodge plant when some office workers were banned by pickets from entering. The company said 50 were stopped. The union said five.

Cold Spell Would Peril Coal Supply

Coal supply experts were wondering yesterday—79.1 degrees in the shade—what might happen to Washington's supplies of coal for household and small-consumer use if winter returns in force "for a week to two."

But outside of the home coal-burn picture, the three-day work-week in the Nation's coal fields has not affected Washington's stockpiling of hard fuel.

A survey disclosed that the city's two main consumers—Federal Supply Service, the Government's coal-purchasing agency, and Potomac Electric Power Co.—have normal or near-normal supplies.

Private coal dealers, however, have only enough for a week's use.

Patrick A. Deck, chairman of the coal division of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, said that if 20 and 30-degree temperatures hit Washington for more than a week dealer supplies might be exhausted.

Living Costs

Dip Slightly

The cost-of-living index was off a fraction for the November 15-December 15 period, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday.

The decline of seven tenths of 1 percent nationally resulted because food and clothing prices fell more than enough to offset slowly rising rent and utility bills.

Food was down 1.7 percent nationally while for Washington the cost fell 3.2 percent.

The decline in egg prices was a big factor in lower food bills, the BLS figures showed. On December 15, the average Washington price for eggs was 63.3 cents a dozen, down 17.1 percent in a single month.

The Associated Press reported that egg prices are at the lowest point in nine years in some parts of the Nation.

Chicken prices, too, are down, partly because the supply of broilers and fryers is about 26 percent greater than last January.

The Agriculture Department, chicken raisers and market groups are sponsoring "Eat-More-Chicken Week," beginning today. Washington stores are advertising prices as low as 35 cents a pound, depending on the method of dressing.

Lewis Agrees to Resume Talks

UMW since negotiations on a new work contract were begun in the spring of 1949. In effect, the operators want to extend the old contract for 2½ years, without a change in wages or welfare fund royalties, and to limit Lewis' power to call out the miners at will.

The United Mine Workers, on the other hand, have been insisting on a $15 a day pay scale, instead of $14.05; to raise the royalty from 20 to 35 cents a ton; and retention of Lewis' powers to call out the miners for "memorial periods" or when they didn't feel "able and willing" to work.

"Normal, Steady Work" Sought

Love, who heads the Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co., in announcing the offer to reopen negotiations, said his group of operators was taking the action so "that all of those who live as a result of coal mining may promptly return to normal and steady work and take care of the needs of coal consumers."

"Operations of steel mills are being curtailed and there are threatened power shortages in many communities," he said.

"Because a national catastrophe has only been averted by an unseasonable warm winter, the operators have asked for a prompt reply to their letter."

Lewis didn't wait for the letter to arrive. He maintains a news ticker at the UMW offices. He accepted, without conditions, within four hours of the Love statement.

Should the operators agree to meet with Lewis here Wednesday, the Denham injunction suit, already postponed for a week, may again be delayed by mutual agreement of all parties.

Other coal developments: The National Coal Association, which includes most of the soft coal producers, called a general meeting of its members here for February 2, apparently in a move to undertake a Nation-wide campaign against Lewis as a "labor monopolist."

The Pennsylvania Railroad announced it has furloughed 15,000 employees in the past few days because of the slowdown in coal mining.

Garfinckel Buys N. Y. Store

Julius Garfinckel & Co., Inc., Washington department store, has purchased stock control of A. DePinna Co. of New York City, it was announced yesterday.

Established in 1885, the DePinna firm occupies its own building at 642-50 Fifth ave. and deals in men's, women's and children's apparel. Latest balance sheet as of January 31, 1949, shows assets of nearly two million dollars and net sales of $5,450,000 for the fiscal year.

The purchase is the second such step taken by Garfinckel's in recent years. In March, 1946, the Washington store bought control of Brooks Brothers, a men's specialty shop. Complete ownership was assumed in May, 1947.

Negotiations for the purchase of DePinna were directed by Richard P. Dunn of Auchincloss, Parker & Redpath, Washington and New York investment banking firm. Financial details were not disclosed, but it is known that stock control was vested in the Foster family. Roy Foster is president of DePinna.

There are 164,902 DePinna common shares outstanding among about 500 stockholders. Latest bid price on DePinna stock was $2.75 a share in the over-the-counter market.

In addition to the main store on Fifth ave., DePinna operates seasonal shops at Magnolia, Mass., and Miami Beach, Fla., and a year-round establishment in New Haven, Conn.

Bell System Official Defends Pay Rates

A Bell System official yesterday charged that the CIO Communication Workers of America is "sabotaging the facts" when it claims that telephone workers are among the lowest paid in the Nation.

H. T. Kiffingworth, vice president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., who heads the long lines department, declared that union statements on low telephone wages are "completely misleading."

"Not only have the national union leaders threatened to sabotage the public's telephone lines by 'jamming,' but now they are sabotaging the facts," he said. "The facts show that our people rank among the best paid industrial groups in the Nation."

He cited following salaries in the long-lines division: Plant craftsmen average $78.71 weekly in St. Louis; $81.75 in Minneapolis; $80.81 in New York. Telephone operators average $45.60 in St. Louis; $45.37 in Minneapolis; $50.51 in New York. (Washington operators get $36 to $62 a week.)

Meanwhile, William N. Margolis, assistant chief of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, met with A. T. & T. officials in New York yesterday for exploratory talks in a Government move to avert a threatening strike of 250,000 telephone workers in a demand for higher wages and other benefits. Margolis plans to fly to Cincinnati to confer with Joseph Beirne, CWA president.

Sales Tax Like D.C.'s Asked for Virginia

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Jan. 26.—A 2 percent sales tax bill, patterned after the District of Columbia law, was introduced in the Virginia Senate today.

Senator Andrew W. Clarke, of Alexandria, patron of the measure, said its enactment would provide about 30 million dollars a year for schools. It would become effective January 1, 1951.

Companion bills introduced by Clarke would abolish the tax on merchants' capital and permit governing bodies of any city, town or county to provide that payment of the sales tax be in lieu of the present tax on personal property not used in business.

Clarke said these exemptions would decrease current State revenues by an estimated one million dollars a year.

Two sales tax bills have already been introduced in the House of Delegates. One calls for 3 percent levy, the other is a 2 percent sales tax bill, similar to Clarke's but without accompanying tax reductions.

The Alexandria Senator continued to outstrip his colleagues in the General Assembly in the number of bills introduced this session. He also proposed today that:

1. The Fairfax County Board of Supervisors appoint members of the county school board as terms of current members expire, thereby abolishing the county School Trustee Electoral Board. The trustee board is appointed by the judge of the Circuit Court and elects the school board under present law.
2. Fairfax County be authorized to borrow money and issue bonds to acquire land for parks and playgrounds.
3. The Virginia Real Estate Board be permitted to keep license fees remitted by applicants for a license if they fail to pass the State examination or fail to qualify for bond.

Clarke said he is drafting a bill to allow a change in the Fairfax County form of government. It should be read for introduction in the Senate Friday, he said.

Open House at Workshop

The Workshop Center of the Arts, 2020 Massachusetts ave. n.w., will start its new semester with an open house at 8 p. m. today.

Pinkney Earnshaw, president of the Surattsville P.T.A.; Mrs. G. W. Rigor, P.T.A. member; Thomas Gwynn, Jr., director of school planning in Prince Georges County, and John Pryde, principal of the Surattsville School. They also toured other Prince Georges schools

School planners from Surattsville District in Prince Georges County were given some helpful hints on how to plan their own community school yesterday in a tour of five of the county's most modern school buildings.

The all-day tour was arranged by school officials as one phase of a recently adopted "democratic process" in school planning. Under the plan, P.T.A. leaders are to be given a firm voice in future school planning, a spokesman for the county board of education said.

From the group of nine who participated in the tour, and other "interested patrons," a planning committee will be chosen to make recommendations on a proposed addition to the Surattsville school, to be built this year.

Their recommendations will be aired later at a joint meeting of the county board of education and an architect to be selected to plan the school addition.

School officials said every effort will be made to incorporate in the new building the suggestions made by the lay committee. Although school patrons have been given a voice in school planning for some time, yesterday marked the first time any of them have been taken on a tour of new facilities before making their decisions.

The policy will be maintained hereafter, county school officials said.

Yesterday's tour, directed by Thomas A. Gwynn, director of school planning for the county, included visits to the Frederick Sasser High School, the new vocational unit of the Bladensburg High School, Landover Hills Elementary School, District Heights Elementary School and the Oxon Hill High School.

All are newly completed buildings featuring the latest developments in school design, according to school officials.

Bill, Resolution Introduced To Eliminate Virginia Poll Tax

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Jan. 26.—Two bills to increase special district, county or city taxes on all property from $1.50 to $2.50.

Norfolk senators today introduced in the General Assembly a double-edged plan to repeal the poll tax in Virginia.

They frankly acknowledged that their course of action in promoting one or the other will hinge on "what occurs in Congress with respect to National poll tax legislation."

Senators Edward L. Breeden, Jr., and Robert F. Baldwin, Jr. sponsored a joint resolution and a bill, which would, respectively:

1. Call for a referendum to amend sections of the Constitution covering the poll tax and voting requirements if the measure passes two sessions of the General Assembly, as required by law.
2. Call a "limited" constitutional convention simply to strike from the Constitution the provisions requiring poll tax payment prior to voting.

In a joint statement, the senators said they have concluded that the "clearest and best" procedure to follow is "through introduction of the resolution setting forth in detail the changes sought." These would:

1. Prohibit the requirement of any tax as a prerequisite to voting.
2. Provide for "such reasonable tests as to literacy, uniformly administered, as the General Assembly may prescribe."
3. Require registration or renewal of registration annually within such a period of time as the General Assembly may prescribe, but not more than 90 days before any election.
4. Establish renewal of registration by voting in the previous year, appearing personally before the registrar or other methods that may be provided by law.

"We would frankly prefer the more workmanlike proposals contained in the resolution," Breeden and Baldwin said.

However, should the Federal Congress prohibit the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in Federal elections, it might then become the better part of wisdom to promptly call a limited constitutional convention, as this permits speedier action.

Thus the proposed repeal of the poll tax, defeated along with other voting amendments to the constitution in the November election, was put up in a new form in the General Assembly.

Other measures already introduced would call for an "unlimited" constitutional convention and for one confined to eliminating the tax as a prerequisite to voting but substituting a head tax therefor.

In a busy legislative day, the Assembly managed to send to the Governor for his signature its first and biggest bill of the current session. It was Senate bill No. 1, the 10-volume 1950 edition of the Virginia code.

Delegate Robert Whitehead of Nelson introduced a bill to give counties "more leeway in collecting school taxes."

Anacostia Bridge Proposal Vetoed

costia River Bridge (11th st.) which should be widened at its northern approaches.

Recommended as remedies for these bottlenecks are an overpass at Minnesota ave., an underpass at 15th and H sts., which Gen. Gordon R. Young, engineer commissioner, yesterday indicated might have to be on two levels; widening of the 11th st. bridge approaches, and one of several suggested plans for eliminating the Barney Circle bottleneck.

When questioned by commission members on the site of the Baltimore-Washington Parkway bridge, Root said he would be agreeable to any connection agreed upon by the NCPPC and the District Commissioners. He added he "hoped" the bridge would take the M st. route.

This route starts from Constitution ave. extended, by-passes the site of the proposed Anacostia Freeway, connects with M st. ne. and Maryland ave., crosses the Anacostia in a line roughly connecting with Maryland ave. extended, and joins the projected parkway east of the Kenilworth Lily Pond.

Chief advocates of the different bridges which commission members thought they were going to vote on yesterday were General Young, who for the first time revealed comparable costs of the two proposed crossings, and John Nolen.

General Young gave these miniimum and maximum cost estimates: East Capitol st.: Minimum, $8,702,500; maximum, $12,046,000; intermediate, $10,326,000.

Massachusetts ave.: Minimum, $6,578,000; maximum, $9,290,000. Young said the difference in the figures reflected the different costs of various approaches.

In rebuttal, Nolen said the Massachusetts ave. minimum figure Young quoted was about four million dollars more than the joint study had found necessary, and provision of more fill material in the river proper.

Nolen said Young's revised figures apparently were based on "more extreme approaches" to the minimum figure for the East Capitol Street bridge which General Young submitted entirely omitted a $1,700,000 item needed for a Constitution ave. approach to the bridge.

Nolen said adoption of the East Capitol st. bridge proposal would: Eliminate the lower Baltimore-Washington Parkway crossing (proposed by Root).

Force abandonment of the natural location for the Fort Drive circumferential ring.

Force abandonment of Massachusetts ave. as the natural link between Independence and Massachusetts aves. and Routes 4 and 5 in southern Maryland.

Nolen declared that if the Highway Department's proposal were

Weekly Newspaper Stockholders Lose Suit for $150,000

A minority group of stockholders in the Washington Tribune, Inc., operators of a defunct weekly newspaper here, yesterday lost a $150,000 contract damage suit against the Afro-American Publishing Co.

The suit resulted from the purchase of 60 percent of the Tribune stock by the Afro-American in 1945. The plaintiffs contended the defendants acted fraudulently and intended to drive the Tribune, its competitor, out of business.

Through the law firm of Cobb, Howard & Hayes, the Afro-American asserted it was impossible to make the Tribune into a profitable newspaper, although an attempt to do so was maintained for 14 months.

accepted: "I can't see for the life of me that you'd have anything left but a common nuisance" at Kingman Lake. He said the water content of the lake, developed at great expense for water sports, would become stagnant and filled with refuse.

The NCPPC planning director called selection of the East Capitol Street Bridge site "unnatural and unfavorable" and a choice of "the widest expanse of water in this part of the valley with extensive low flat areas on either side."

Alfred Greensfelder, who left for Europe before the commission's session ended, and didn't participate in the voting, said he would favor an East Capitol bridge with an "inspired approach." But he said he opposed the bridge's construction as a "Manhattan loop-the-loop," as he indicated, present plans envisioned it.

In his arguments for construction of the Massachusetts ave. crossing, Nolen told NCPPC members that, with the expected traffic increases, and the siphoning off of new traffic by existing bridges, the Massachusetts ave. bridge, if built, might eliminate need for any additional bridge between South Capitol Street and Pennsylvania ave. before 1980.

Peace His Sole Aim, Truman Tells Women

By Genevieve Reynolds
Post Reporter

President Truman last night declared that he had but one ambition—to see peace in the world and an efficient United Nations working to save peace.

He spoke at the banquet of the twenty-fourth annual Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense at the Statler Hotel.

Referring to his one ambition, the Chief Executive said that once peace is assured he would be willing to follow his good friend, the Mayor of Independence, Mo. (Mayor Roger T. Sermon died Tuesday from a heart attack).

The President told the some 1500 delegates and their guests that he regretted he was unable to attend the Sermon funeral. He recalled that the Independence Mayor had held that post since 1924.

The President then spoke of attending the wedding of Miss Drucie Snyder, daughter of the Secretary of the Treasury. "She's younger than my daughter, but I won't give away her age," he quipped. "Asserting that yesterday was quite a busy day, the President added, every day is busy for that matter."

"I spend every day urging people to do what they should do without urging," he said. "That's what you call the power of the President."

He went on to say that the President's job is one of public relations.

Laughingly referring to the duties of the Vice President, he defined them as one, to preside over the Senate; two, to inquire about the President's health.

Continuing in the same light vein, he quipped "this Vice President (Barke) presides over the Senate but isn't a bit interested in the President's health."

In a serious tone, he pronounced the Constitution of the United States the greatest document in history the world has seen. Then he pledged his full support to that Constitution.

Concluding the President said: "All I live for is permanent peace."

Featured speakers at the morning session today will be Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.), Representative Richard Nixon (R., Calif.), and Shane MacCarthy.

Other speakers on today's program will be Representative Walter H. Judd (R., Minn.), Col. C. Tyler Wood, assistant administrator for operation of ECA, and Angus Ward, American Consul General to Mukden, China, who was imprisoned by Chinese Communists.

Falls Church Charter Action Is Delayed

Recalled by Bishop
Msgr. Reilly
Leaves for New Post

Recall of the Right Rev. Msgr. John J. Reilly, national director of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, to the Hartford, Conn., diocese, was announced yesterday.

The Right Rev. Msgr. Patrick J. McCormick, rector of Catholic University, said Msgr. Reilly had been recalled by his bishop, the Most Rev. Henry J. O'Brien, to become pastor of St. Patrick's Church in Norwich. He will assume his new duties February 20.

On loan from the Hartford diocese, Monsignor Reilly was appointed director of the National Shrine at Catholic University in June 1940 by Monsignor McCormick, who is also a member of the Hartford diocese.

Monsignor Reilly returns to Monsignor McCormick's former parish to become pastor. Monsignor Reilly served there as an assistant priest shortly after his ordination in 1923. St. Patrick's is a well established parish, with a church building seating 2200 persons, a school and convent, and a Community House.

Monsignor Reilly as national director of the Shrine at Catholic University has become nationally known as a radio speaker and pulpit orator. He has been the speaker on the Hour of Faith program a number of times, and earlier on the Columbia Church of the Air. Locally, he is chaplain of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Knights of St. John and of the Washington chapter of the Catholic Order of Foresters. During the past two years he has served as secretary of the Bishop's Committee named to raise 5 million dollars for the completion of the Shrine.

Pianist Gives Recital at Howard U.

By Paul Hume
Gunnar Johannsen played a piano recital at Howard University last night.

He has appeared there before and has a large following which never fails to welcome him. His program was on the extremely conservative side. Mozart's C Minor Fantasy opened, to be followed by the B Flat Impromptu of Schubert. These were equally well played, with fine musical contour but rather monotonous tone. The evening's sonata was the last of the thirty-two by Beethoven. Its two movements can almost be called sprawling but their somewhat invertebrate distances were held together by Johannsen's comprehension of the meaning of the music. His technique never becomes obvious but is certainly enough for all demands.

He announced Schumann's Symphonic Studies with a vigorous absence of sentimentality. The concert concluded with short pieces by Ravel, Debussy, and Johann Strauss.

Boston U. Group to Sing

The Seminary Singers of the Boston University School of Theology will give a concert at 8 p. m. today at Marvin Memorial Methodist Church, Four Corners, Silver Spring, Md.

Manila (Friday), Jan. 27 (AP).—A weird story that two American professors were slain in a primitive tribal rite on Christmas Day was told by the United States Embassy today.

The two, Robert F. Conklin and Marvin Pittman, disappeared on a hiking tour in wild country 150 miles northeast of Manila. Their bodies later were recovered. Six Ifugao tribesmen, once headhunters, are held for the slayings.

This is the story told embassy officials: The two professors, members of the Philippines University staff, happened along at a time when crops were poor. Witch doctors were looking for a sacrifice to regenerate the soil.

The tribe decided to sacrifice the professors, who were looking for guides. Tribesmen agreed to accompany Pittman and Conklin. They stopped at a spot selected for the sacrifice. The headman came up and plunged his spear into the back of each professor, in accordance with custom. The others completed the killing and placed the bodies in a primitive irrigation canal.

"The theory was that water flowing over their bodies would spread their spirit over the rice and garden plots of the tribe far down the valley, giving new fertility to the soil, the embassy was told.

Vast Riches Of U. S. Lost

Lines, which was guaranteed a total of 100 million dollars sales value of the surplus property, now maintains it was able to realize only 45 million dollars from what was turned over to it. Therefore it is negotiating to get the remaining 55 million dollars in cash or otherwise from the United States, making the case of importance currently to the American taxpayer.

James A. McConnell, former United States foreign liquidation administrator, cited almost incredible instances of wholesale thievery of surplus property.

The United States armed forces had a "tank farm" of 17 oil tanks and a 35 mile long feed line on Bataan, which was abandoned after the war, holding dismantling in abeyance until sale or transfer could be arranged. An Air Force pilot reported the landmark had disappeared. He was not at first believed, but he was right.

"Investigation revealed that every vestige of the installation, including the 35 miles of pipe-line, had been carried off almost overnight," McConnell said.

Around 100 quonset huts were dismantled and removed from a Leyte depot in one night.

A large pile-driver disappeared. It was found in the possession of a contractor.

"He had a bill of sale for it from a Chinese firm," McConnell reported. "The Government started legal proceedings, but was unable to recover the pile-driver."

Man Found Guilty Of Stealing Purse In Church

Francis Aloysius Roach, 44, yesterday pleaded guilty in Municipal Court to stealing the handbag of a worshipper in St. Patrick's Church, 619 10th st. n.w., Wednesday. He was charged with petty larceny.

Municipal Judge Armond Scott continued the case for sentencing, later pending probation report.

Roach, who gave his address as the Gospel Mission, was chased and seized by another church-goer, Steven Barkanic, 416 Rittenhouse st. n.w., after Roach fled from the church with the handbag containing $1.44 and a watch belonging to Inez White, 48, of 1922 Quincy st. n.e., a student at Catholic University.

Fts. L. J. Fauna and D. M. Smith, noticing the disturbance, arrested Roach.

Barse Says Judges Are Overloaded

Chief Judge George P. Barse of Municipal Court told the Attorney General yesterday that the 10 judges of the court cannot get its calendar up to date.

The jurist, in making his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1949, pointed out that it is "understood" that three additional judges authorized by Congress will soon be appointed. Then, he said, it is "hoped" that the work of the court can then become current.

There is no guarantee, Judge Barse said, that the court will continue to stay on a current basis even then. He pointed to the 149,179 new cases filed in the court during the year, a 7.08 percent increase over the previous year and said that there is no indication that business will fall off in the court.

He advised the Attorney General that it may become necessary in the future to ask for even more judges and said that the situation would be eased if an additional jurist for the Juvenile Court were authorized.

The report states that during the year, an increase in business was noted in each of the court divisions except for the United States branch where nonjury misdemeanor trials and preliminary felony hearings are held. Here, a 5.32 percent decrease was shown.

The largest increase, 20 percent, was in the Class B civil cases comprising cases where between $50 and $500 is sought.

Liquor Permit Denied Tavern At Beltsville

Heading the protests of the University of Maryland, the College Park Town Council and about 30 citizens, the Prince Georges liquor commissioners yesterday rejected an application for a liquor permit sought by the Knotty Pine Tavern at Beltsville.

The application was one of three rejected by the board at its January hearing in Upper Marlboro. The two others were denied because the commissioners said there was insufficient demand for additional taverns in the areas affected.

The board issued one new permit, approved ownership transfers affecting three taverns, and granted two applicants supplemental permits to sell liquor in addition to beer.

Geary Eppley, dean of men at the University of Maryland, represented the school in opposition to the Knotty Pine Tavern license application, on the ground that the establishment is too close to the campus. Spokesmen for the College Park City Council and residents of the area contended there are already enough liquor establishments in that section of the county.

Other unsuccessful applicants were Italo-American World War Veterans Club, 6207 Brook rd., Seat Pleasant, and the Veterans Hall, at Mitchellville.

Her El Paso attorney, William Cocke, said, "I am under definite instructions not to make any public statement."

Stock Prices Edge Higher; Trade Quiet

New York, Jan. 26 (AP).—The stock market turned in a winning score today for the first time this week.

The advance was small but a clean majority of leading shares closed with fractional gains. A few moved up a point or so.

A high degree of caution clamped down on activity, partly because of the labor situation and partly because of two severe sinking spells the market has had in the past couple of weeks.

Business was the slowest in two months, with 1,150,000 shares changing hands. This compared with 1,570,000 yesterday.

Interest revived near the close and final prices were at or close to the best levels of the session. Corporate news gave a helping hand to several stocks.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks edged up 1.1 of one point to 72.3, the most active stock group was more than offset by slight rises in the rail and utility sections.

Bethlehem Steel advanced 1/2 to 32 1/2 in advance of the annual earnings report released after the close. The report disclosed record 1949 net income despite effects of an October strike.

U. S. Steel, third most active issue, edged up 1/4 to 28.

Sperry Corp., needed by a record peacetime order from the Army, gained 3/4 to 27 1/2. Motorola had the aid of an excellent progress report by the company's vice president and moved up 1/2 to 25 1/2.

Greyhound, most active stock added 1/4 to 11 1/2. Other active and higher included Armour at 10 1/2, South Carolina Electric, 10 1/2, American Woolen, 31 1/2, Avco Mfg., 5 1/2, Goebel Brewing, 11 1/2, and Westinghouse Electric, 11 1/2.

N. Y. Central Net Drops $5 Million in Year
New York, Jan. 26 (AP).—The New York Central Railroad today reported its net income in 1949 dropped five million dollars below the previous year, reflecting coal slowdowns and the steel strike.

Steel Industry Is Guinea Pig As Congress Seeks Just Price

By J. A. Livingston

HOW do you prove whether a price is too high or too low? The answer is, you don't, you can't. Yet that is the question Senator Joseph O'Mahoney's Committee on the Economic Report is investigating.

A procession of steel executives has declared that steel prices had to be raised because of the recent instituted pension plan, because of higher transportation rates, because of higher coal prices.

But committee members had before them a report showing that the 10 largest steel companies earned 14 percent on their stockholders' investment in 1948, highest for any year since 1918. That was a hard statistic to shake off. If profits are that high, why should prices go higher? Why not absorb the boost in costs?

Benjamin Fairless, head of U. S. Steel, and the first witness for the steel companies, argued that the high level of profits in one year was not conclusive. Steel is a feast and famine industry. In the depression '30s, most companies suffered large deficits.

Besides, present-day profits are not to be taken at face value. The cost of putting up a new steel plant has more than doubled since 1939. Depreciation reserves are based on prewar costs. So profits are inflated by under-depreciation.

THE HEARINGS are like a successful farce musical comedy. You're not only heard the tunes as originally played, but you've heard the records too. This same committee, then chaired by Senator Taft, had a go at the steel industry in February, 1948. That was just after U. S. Steel, followed by Bethlehem and other companies, boosted the price of unfinished products by $5 a ton.

The result was just as indecisive as this hearing is bound to be. Nobody in this world has been able to decide what is a just price—just for the seller, and just for the buyer, and just for the Nation. Price is a matter of judgment, trial, error, experience, and habit.

Years ago, price was a pretty simple matter: You charged what the traffic would bear. The seller got what he could while the getting was good.

Chicago Grain
Chicago, Jan. 26 (AP).—Weather and export business continued to give grain a slight boost on the Board of Trade today. The weather, which helped boost the market, was a factor in the rise. The Board of Trade today reported a record high for wheat, 1.20 1/2, and a record low for corn, 1.10 1/2.

N. Y. Bank Raises Rates On Savings Accounts
New York, Jan. 26 (AP).—The National City Bank of New York announced today it would increase the interest rates on savings accounts, effective February 1. On deposits from $5 to $2500, interest will be increased to 1 1/2 percent from 1 percent. On amounts over $2500 up to $25,000, the rate will be raised to 0.5 percent from 0.25 percent.

Jury Tampering

The effort to bribe the jury in the Snags Lewis gambling trial is more evidence that gambling in Washington cannot be brushed off as a petty or innocuous business. Here is direct indication of an attempt to corrupt justice. The intimidation or buying of juries is as grave a threat as there can be to the integrity of the courts. This is a perfect example of how the underworld, when tolerated at all, seeks to get the whole machinery of law enforcement under its thumb.

Judge Holtzoff is to be commended for his prompt and vigorous response to the threat. United States Attorney Fay has presented the matter to the grand jury and has asked for help from the FBI. Considering the seriousness of this attempted jury tampering under the very nose of the Federal Government, Attorney General McGrath ought to lose no time in making the services of the FBI available.

Another facet of the same picture, by no means remotely connected, is the report that two more Washington gamblers have been hijacked of substantial sums of money. At least five such instances have now come to light, beginning with the disclosure that Emmitt Warring was robbed of $20,000 at his home earlier this month. Whether the hijackings are the products of imported thugs or local talent, or both, they indicate that a major crime wave is going on and that the mobsters are not playing for peanuts.

The most significant part about these disclosures is that police have been strangely silent about them. Only when rumors have arisen from other sources have police confirmed that they knew about the robberies. Their excuse has been that the reports are not "official." How many other instances of serious crime go similarly "unreported"? It looks very much as if this is another case of "pocketed" crime reports, in which police records do not tell the whole story. Here ought to be the focal point of concern for the House District Subcommittee investigating crime in Washington. Certainly it will not have done its job unless it devotes major attention to the manner in which police have approached the problem of gambling and related crimes.

Draft And Defense

This newspaper believes that retention of the selective service law is essential to sound national defense. The importance of having on the books some means of calling men into the armed forces should be apparent even without consideration of the horrendous picture of an atomic blitz painted by General Collins. Although the draft is not now being used to keep the armed forces at their reduced strength, its presence is credited with being an effective psychological influence on enlistments. More important, the existence of a draft law is an earnest of our intention to carry out our commitments under the Atlantic Pact. The failure to continue it would be a blow to European nations. It also would be a signal to Russia that the United States was retreating to weakness or isolationism. Such an inconsistency could severely complicate our position in the cold war.

Although it is not necessary to provide a mere carbon copy of the 1948 act which expires in June—the plant-seizure provisions, for example, really belong in a general mobilization plan—it would be foolish to cut down the statutory strength of the armed forces. These limitations, considerably above present strengths, are mere authorizations; the actual forces in being are determined by yearly budgets. The higher authorization would, however, save time in an emergency, just as retention of mandatory registration of 18-year-olds and selective service machinery would save several months in mobilization.

Assuming that Congress will recognize the national interest in keeping the draft, the real controversy is likely to arise over how the machinery may be put into effect. Shall this power be reserved to Congress, or shall the President be authorized to place the draft in operation after consultation with the National Security Council, as the Joint Chiefs of Staff recommend? In anything but atomic attack, the question would be academic, for assuredly Congress could be counted upon to respond to any real emergency. On the other hand, the possibility of a blitz that would interrupt the executive branch as well as Congress cannot be counted out.

It is no more than realism in the atomic age to recognize that the seat of government might be suddenly obliterated. If Congress is to consider the broad implications of atomic attack in continuing the draft, it can scarcely avoid providing some means of choosing a new President if the line of succession were disrupted. Certainly in the event of such attack the President or Acting President ought to be empowered to invoke the draft and all other means of defense.

Conflict Of Loyalties

When a man, feeling in duty bound, bares himself over a private matter, it is distressing to have to tell him he is guilty of an intrusion. Yet Secretary Acheson has imposed this burden upon the onlooker by his highminded and honorable comment in the Hiss case. This was no outburst of the heart, but, in the knowledge that a question would be put, a deliberate and carefully thought-out statement. As a friend and former associate of Alger Hiss, Secretary Acheson gave his piece to the world; yet he testified from his position as Secretary of State of the United States at his official press conference. In our view he was wrong to do so.

It was just as wrong as was Secretary Hughes' statement in the twenties in the celebrated Newberry case. The case against Newberry was that he had bought his election as Senator from Michigan, and Newberry resigned his seat. Mr. Hughes' gratuitous opinion in a matter in which he had a personal interest earned for him widespread criticism for a departure from the proprieties as Secretary of State. Here was a case of conflict of loyalties. It arises again as a result of Secretary Acheson's intervention in the Hiss case. We freely grant the dilemma that the Secretary of State was in; but as long as he is Secretary of State, that connection must be foremost in his mind in his public utterances. He is a public person. In spite of Mr. Acheson's weighed words to the contrary, what millions of people will feel is that a high official—the fourth in the Nation's hierarchy—was casting doubt on the judicial process which landed a friend in jail.

Mr. Acheson's error has, it seems to us, not one facet, but several. Mr. Acheson has played right into the hands of the yammers in our midst who are trying to rend our society with the Alger Hiss conviction as the instrument—has, indeed, given them a handle. He has provided this fell and divisive work with a big push. Mr. Acheson, disclaiming any desire to question the judicial process, thinks it was his duty to give aid and comfort to his friend—to stand up and be counted in friendship's name. What he really did, we feel, was to insure the bandying about of his friend's name for a generation—just because Mr. Acheson is the high official he is. Aside from the effect on Alger Hiss, this is unconsciously doing a disservice to our institutions. More of this sort of thing, and we shall have whipped up a fury of the factionalism that disrupts.

What Mr. Acheson has done, moreover, is, to appear to lend color to the allegation that Mr. Hiss was really a significant person in this country's policy-making. This is quite absurd. But one may be sure the charge will gather momentum from Mr. Acheson's sensational contribution. This is unfair to the foreign service. It will hurt the standing of our diplomacy in the people's eyes. In getting his loyalty to a friend off his chest, Mr. Acheson has embarrassed bystanders in his own department. All this is what comes when a public man mixes up his private and his public affairs. Judgment was obscured when Secretary Acheson decided to yield to a personal sentiment. He clearly had to say something, but he said too much. His conscience and the proprieties would have been served if he had told the reporters that this was a private matter and that he had had his say—if, that is, he felt he could not limit himself to his initial disclaimer on the grounds that the case is still under appeal.

Disability Insurance

Senate approval of the bill passed by the House expanding the coverage and increasing the benefits payable under the old-age insurance system is confidently anticipated, although the Senate may make some changes in detail. However, there is likely to be a battle royal over the proposal to pension insured workers who become permanently and totally disabled before reaching retirement age. For some members of Congress claim that it would open the way for introduction of national compulsory health insurance.

In our opinion, that assumption is quite untenable. As a matter of fact the proposal would not involve any fundamental change in the old-age insurance system. It merely recognizes the need for a more flexible retirement system providing pensions for workers forced by circumstances beyond their control to withdraw prematurely from active life. Then, too, as the Ways and Means Committee report on the social insurance bill points out: "The worker who has paid social insurance contributions for a number of years—perhaps over much of his working lifetime—has a real stake in the system which deserves to be recognized. He should not be required to show need to become entitled to benefits."

Yet under the present law disabled workers who may have made regular and substantial contributions to the Federal old-age insurance system are not entitled to receive benefits until they are 65 years of age. Unless they have independent means, they are forced to rely for subsistence on public aid or private charity. Moreover, the amount of benefits to which they can lay claim eventually, if death does not overtake them before they reach retirement age, steadily declines during the intervening years of enforced idleness. This shrinkage is due to the methods employed in the computation of their average monthly wages which in turn are used to compute the amount of their annuities.

While employees disabled on the job may benefit from State workmen's compensation laws, only 5 percent or thereabouts of all permanent and total disability cases are work-connected. Consequently the vast majority of workers have no protection against loss of earning power caused by disability. In justice to helpless men and women who have earned the right to pension protection by contributing to the old-age insurance fund and who have the added misfortune of being disabled, this gap in the insurance system should be closed.

Objections to pensions for the totally disabled based on considerations of cost ignore the fact that such pensions would reduce the pressure for public aid. Nor is there any reason to fear that malingering would be encouraged by pensioning the disabled, in view of the severely limited benefits provided under the House bill, plus the requirement of a six-month waiting period before payments would begin. Moreover, if a pensioner is tempted to sham illness, the examining physician can usually be trusted to discover the fraud.

It is conceivable that disability pensions, once introduced, might be progressively liberalized until eventually full-fledged compulsory health insurance might be brought in by the back door. But in view of the fact that the Administration is already openly working for a national health insurance program it seems absurd to assume that the outcome of the struggle over disability pensions will influence action on the health program.

India: Republic

There was not enough substance about the transformation of India yesterday into a republic to warrant much celebration. Only a form has been overturned, a name changed. Independence became a reality two years ago, and the Indians have got used to it. India's sense of novelty has worn off amid the responsibilities of being on its own. Fortunately it took over a civil service which still serves the purpose of administering the affairs of 350 million independent people. There are, to be sure, excesses of bureaucracy, but the Indian government could argue by way of extenuation that this is due to extra burdens, such as the taking over of the princely states, the need for reform, partition, and economic deterioration. All of these issues are uniquely complex, and, together, make the task of Indian statesmen a formidable indeed. However, achievement is impeded by several handicaps. All reformers are apt to get "lost in Utopia," and Indian reformers are no exception. The redemption of some of the old party slogans and pledges, notably prohibition, is an activity that is a credit to the heart but not to the mind. And first things are not coming first in the business of government, and this is demonstrated in the paralysis over the conflict with Pakistan.

By far the most important issue in the present-day state of India is this conflict with Pakistan. When the Indian subcontinent was freed, the Muslim League and the Congress Party set up two separate countries. Pakistan is Muslim, or theocratic; India is secular. The trouble was that the split was like cutting one living body into two separate halves, for the political division has worked out in economic apertures. This is the great tragedy that overshadows the subcontinent. Neither side will recognize the complementary nature of its economy. The mills in India's Calcutta are starved for the jute that is being withheld by Pakistan; Pakistan is getting its coal all the way from Poland, though coal is located just across the border in India; and so on. To be sure, the rivalry over Kashmir figures most prominently in the Indo-Pakistan squabble, but there cannot be any progress over Kashmir till there has been some move toward a meeting of minds over economic relations.

The trouble now is that the attitudes on both sides have become so inflexible that only the proffer of good offices by a third party seems capable of softening those attitudes. Again the issue is where to begin. At the commonwealth conference at Colombo, the delegates appear to have persuaded India and Pakistan to accept the services of an Englishman in adjusting the quarrel over the price of jute, so that the jute can move again to Calcutta. Unemployed growers and workers are not likely to endure their idleness and misery quietly. But the place to start in adjusting this difficulty is, surely, the Monetary Fund. Trade came to a standstill when India devalued its currency and Pakistan took no action. It seems incredible in retrospect that India failed to consult Pakistan before taking such a crucial step, though this was perhaps inevitable when the two lacked speaking terms.

The Monetary Fund, to which Pakistan has applied for admission, could offer to correct the currency distortion, though it would be better, since the issues between the two countries cover all aspects of relations, if the United States and Britain offered to set up across-the-board good offices, with the Monetary Fund represented. There is no chance of any improvement in India, let alone in Pakistan, unless something is done to bring India and Pakistan together. As it is, the economies are running down, and more and more time and money are being devoted to military establishments—time and money taken away from the people's welfare. That is the major reason that an atmosphere of frustration hangs over the current celebration in New Delhi. That is why the subcontinent presents a spectacle of reciprocal throat-cutting, to the benefit of nobody except communism and Russia.

Letters To The Editor

Sousa Principal

It is necessary to clarify a story which appeared in your issue of January 24, reporting an open meeting of Southeast Washington citizens. As you correctly pointed out, the meeting was hastily called to pass a resolution indorsing Mr. John Koonz for the principalship of the new John Sousa Junior High School. There are two points in your report, however, which will create considerable controversy in this area, and should be corrected.

1. This was not a meeting of duly-appointed and specifically-instructed agents of the many organizations in the Southeast area. Your reporter cited me, and several other persons, as "representing" various parent-teacher and citizens associations. No one at this meeting had the right to speak for any group, and it can merely be said that out of the many thousands of persons in this area, 80 persons happened to be at this meeting—50 of these agreeing on a resolution.

2. The opposition to the resolution was not antagonistic to Mr. Koonz in any sense. No one at the meeting had a word to say against Mr. Koonz, who appears to be an admirable gentleman and an efficient school administrator. The controversy was whether this particular method—of passing a resolution supporting him for a specific job—was the proper and desirable way of showing admiration for Mr. Koonz.

Those of us who had come in answer to a general invitation to discuss school affairs in our district learned, to our surprise, what was being suggested by the supporters of the resolution. After some discussion, for which most of us had not previously prepared, the opposition came to the conclusion that the admiration for Mr. Koonz was being exploited for ill-considered ends. We insisted that the task of securing and transferring teachers and principals in our school system was properly left to expert administrators and duly appointed officials who are trained for this task and give full time to fulfilling that responsibility.

Newspaper Mortality

The passing of the New York Sun is a symptom of a dangerous trend which threatens our democracy. The number of American newspapers has been declining steadily for a generation. Marquis Childs said in your issue of January 11 that the chief cause of this mortality is the high price of newsprint. This is obviously untrue, for newspapers have been dying at a rapid rate during periods when newsprint prices were low and the paper mills were suffering large losses. But the one factor that persisted during booms and depressions is the increase of featherbed rules and monopolistic practice by the printers' unions. Thurman Arnold bluntly stated so to the Senate Small Business Committee.

The make-work rules in the newspaper composing room were frankly presented to the NLRB in the St. Petersburg, Fla., case by Stewart Beckett, a member of the International Typographical Union for 29 years. The so-called "general laws" of the ITU, actually the working rules, determine the practices and the personnel in the composing room. Article IX, Sec. 2, requires that an ad carried by one local paper may not be acquired by any other paper but the printers have to produce it as nearly like the original, then proofread it, take another proof, submit it to an official of the local union and then throw it away.

Again, Article III, Section 11, prohibits the use of unskilled labor, such as office boys, for unskilled work like cleaning machines and carrying proof, but requires skilled workers at high wage rates. Article VII, Section 1, prohibits the employment of typists to operate typewriters or varitypers in the composing room. Similarly, Article VII, Sections 3 and 4, abolished piecework and bonus payments wherever efficient printers enjoyed higher earnings varying with productivity.

The effect of the featherbed policies of the union is to destroy the small newspapers and to kill jobs not only for printers, but journalists who constitute potentially the future leaders of a great American press. The increasing mortality among independent newspapers calls for vigorous action. There should be a congressional investigation. The Taft-Hartley Act makes such practices illegal for employers and for employers. Why does not the Justice Department bring an action?

"Abandoning Korea"

Your January 22 editorial on "Abandoning Korea" reveals a lack of sympathy for and interest in a brave and determined people in their struggle against communism which is difficult to understand. To those who know the Koreans and the actual conditions that obtain in their home land, it was most discouraging to learn that many Congressmen have fallen for the Communist line that North Korea will soon take over the South Korean Republic, and that they voted against the Korean aid bill for this reason.

If North Korea invades and conquers South Korea it will be because America fails to keep the many promises we have made to stand by the South Korean Republic until she is able to stand on her own feet. With twice the population, a far greater per capita food-producing capacity, and adequate industrial and mineral resources, there is every reason to believe that the south will eventually absorb into itself the weak puppet state that Russia has left as the result of her occupation of the northern half of the peninsula for three years.

At no other place in the world, at this time, would a few million dollars and competent American advisers do more to produce an effective and dramatic demonstration of democracy against communism than in Korea. The hundreds of refugees who are daily coming south to escape the tyranny of the Communist government in the north tell the same story. It is a story of suffering under a police state 10 times worse than they ever experienced under the despotic Japanese.

If we discharge our obligations to the republic that we have, in effect, created in the south, there is not a chance in the world that the government of the so-called "Korean Peoples Republic" will even attempt to invade the south. The government of the Korean Republic has the wholehearted support

Liberal Creed

So now it is that the pendulum has swung to the othermost limits of the arc and we find that the liberals have again fallen on evil days. Yet in his time Socrates was a liberal and they gave him hemlock; Christ was a liberal and was consigned to the cross.

The liberal is an independent and progressive thinker not wedded to the past if reasonable modifications will serve the country better. He is a temporizer and believer in the middle course, or as Aristotle named it, the "golden mean." Live and let live is the philosophy of the liberal. Economically, he wants to advance the cause of the underprivileged—to give them an education so they will learn to discern the truth, and an opportunity to make a modest income in the interest of raising the American general standard of living.

Politically, the liberal believes in that government which serves all the people best—not just a minority, but the proletariat on the left or monopolists on the right. In this connection, he believes that human values come before property rights. In religion a liberal is intolerant only of intolerance.

In short, the liberal looks to the republican form of government for the successful fruition of the democratic way of life. The mark of the liberal is that in his moral opposition to one extreme, communism, he does not give moral support to the other extreme, fascism.

of at least 95 percent of its people, while in the "Korean Peoples Republic" 95 percent of the people would rise up against their military-police government tomorrow and overthrow it if they had a chance to arm and organize themselves.

The Koreans are a simple and trusting people, and they have taken at face value the assurance and promises of aid and support that we have given them since we liberated them from Japan. They believed as we told them that democratic nations such as ours keep their promises, and that totalitarian states such as Russia, Germany, and pre-war Japan are not to be trusted.

But the Koreans are also very human, and they have often been the victims of oppression, and they know what it is to suffer from having been on the wrong side. So, when they hear our Congressmen say that they will soon be taken over by North Korea, when they see us deserting China and falling to defend Formosa, and when they see Britain recognizing Communist China, they may decide that they would rather not be martyrs, and that they had better get on the Communist bandwagon before it is too late.

One fact we should keep in mind in connection with the question of aid to Korea is that had we not made the colossal blunder at Yalta of agreeing to let Russia come into North Korea, the picture would be vastly different today. There would be a united democratic nation, and no question of a Communist half swallowing up a democratic half. If there is any such danger today it is of our own making, and the least we can do is to give all the aid we can to that part of the country which is loyally supporting our policies, and is doing all in its power to oppose Communist expansion.

Lilienthal's Resignation

By Marquis Childs

Light On The Atom

When David Lilienthal steps out as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission next month, he will end 19 years as a public official. His public career began when he gave up the private practice of law to become a member of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission.

A number of offers of jobs have come to him since his resignation was announced. But in his replies to these offers he has indicated that he wanted to take a lot of time to think over his future insofar as a permanent berth was concerned.

That is one reason he will first go on a lecture tour shortly after he steps out. Another reason, of course, is that he is so deeply convinced of the need to enlarge public understanding and public discussion of atomic energy in all its potentialities for war and peace. He will also write for a national magazine with a large circulation.

In both writing and speaking, Lilienthal will, of course, be bound by the official secrecy regulations that impose a close censorship on the works of the Atomic Commission. He will not discuss any technical aspect of atomic energy. This will not, however, prevent him from talking about the political and military implications of the whole problem.

IN RECENT weeks, during the controversy over the proposed hydrogen bomb, he has been put at a distinct disadvantage. Partly by means of carefully calculated leaks, he has been represented in opposition to the bomb and in such a way as to make him seem naive and unrealistic. Presumably when he is free to speak his own mind, he will say frankly what he believes on these great issues that so overshadow the ordinary day-to-day decisions of Government.

Perhaps in that way we shall get a clearer knowledge of what is involved. There will be less confusion, less lurid speculation, and a little more light. During much of his service as AEC chairman, Lilienthal has been a kind of sitting duck for politicians and others who seemed determined to destroy him. But he has proved to be a hardy character. He survived first the bitter wrangle over confirmation and then last year the attacks leveled at him by Senator Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R., Iowa).

When Congress was in recess, Hickenlooper went back to Iowa to mend his political fences. According to experts in that State, those fences are in a bad state of disrepair. If Hickenlooper is not replaced in the primary, then he will be in danger in the November election.

As part of his fence repairing, Hickenlooper pointed with pride to Lilienthal's resignation. That, he said, was proof of his charges of "incredible mismanagement" in the AEC.

BUT Hickenlooper was promptly challenged by a native Iowan who knows far more about atomic energy than the Senator. W. W. Waymack, for many years editor of the Des Moines Register and one of the five men originally appointed to the commission, made a statement vigorously refuting Hickenlooper. Now living in retirement on a farm near Des Moines, he said:

"... from the start of the Washington hearings Senator Hickenlooper tried hard to exclude all evidence of over-all achievements. He fought hard to confine the evidence entirely to such isolated things as he thought were bad or could be made to look bad. Now, as to a few of these isolated things, I would agree with the Senator.

"But I say he has been wrong all along, and is indefensibly wrong now in trying to persuade other people to judge a vast, complex and uniquely new national job by a few specific things that he disagrees with and not by total performance."

Waymack also suggested the need to "restudy" the McMahon Act. In short, he favored the kind of appraisal of the whole atomic energy project that Lilienthal has made as much light and as little heat as possible—that is now so urgently needed. When, like Waymack, he is a free citizen, Lilienthal should be able to contribute a lot to this discussion. During the present interval, President Truman, like Diogenes in search of an honest man, goes on seeking someone to replace Lilienthal. Several industrialists have been sounded out and they have all backed away with nervous haste as though they had been offered the honor of parachuting into the Kremlin to persuade Uncle Joe Stalin that the world is full of sweetness and light.

It is of course, of course, that no qualified and responsible person wants to take on the job. In addition to the vast and fearsome burden itself, there is the likelihood that hip-shooting politicians will decide you are a handy target. The scientists did their job of unleashing the power of the atom; the men of Government seem not to have got very far in learning how to control it.

Matter Of Fact

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

The Indecisive Decision

THE SIGNS now suggest that President Truman will give the order for making the hydrogen bomb. On the one hand, there is the common-sense argument. Refusing to manufacture an absolute weapon while a potential enemy is permitted to do so is tantamount to delayed surrender. On the other hand, there is the political argument. If the President shrinks back from this terrible act, a less nice-minded Congress will probably override him.

Such are the reasons why the President is tending toward ending the present debate within the Government by an affirmative answer. There is, however, one man who can conceivably alter the outcome—Secretary of State Dean G. Acheson.

Acheson holds the deciding vote in a curiously balanced situation. There are divisions, both in the Pentagon and in Congress. But in majority, the service leaders and informed Senators and Representatives are pressing for a quick decision to make the hydrogen bomb. Equally, there are divisions, both in the Atomic Energy Commission and among the scientists. Yet men, in majority, oppose making the bomb at this time. The President is even rumored to have in his hands an adverse report from the great scientists of the AEC's General Advisory Commission.

AS BETWEEN these disputing groups of human beings, David E. Lillenthal and the scientists are Acheson's friends. As might be expected, he has personally explored the hydrogen bomb problem at great length. A special unit within the State Department planning staff has also been assigned to weigh the pros and cons since the end of the summer. Perhaps, in the end, Acheson will find for the men he most likes and admires, and will carry the President with him.

The betting is the other way, if only because the implied acceptance of a risk of ultimate surrender is really, in the last analysis, unthinkable. The real trouble is, however, that even a decision to make the hydrogen bomb will not decide very much.

It will, first of all, leave entirely unsettled the controversy about a "new look" at international control of atomic energy. Certain of the scientists have opposed making hydrogen bombs under any circumstances. The greater number have simply urged that before going ahead we ought to take a new look at this problem with the Kremlin. In the usual roundabout way, a hint has already been received from Moscow of willingness to launch a new negotiation, not based upon the Acheson-Lillenthal-Baruch plan. Proponents of the "new look" have suggested meeting this semi-demi-overture with a plan containing three broad features:

(1) Demilitarization of atomic energy. (2) International inspection to assure demilitarization (but no international ownership, which was the heart of the Acheson-Lillenthal-Baruch scheme). (3) A measure of disarmament to give western Europe some security against the Red army in the new situation.

PROPOSERS of the new look have further suggested appointment of a new high-level commission, like the original Acheson-Lillenthal Commission, to weigh the risks and work out the details of the plan they are urging.

From the Pentagon, meanwhile, have come bitter objections that no such plan could ever afford "full security" to the United States. From Congress have come growls of dissent. And from within the State Department itself have come warnings that the Kremlin will never accept any really workable plan of international atomic energy control. Judging by Secretary Acheson's recent statement on the subject, the chances for the new look do not appear very good.

This is nothing short of tragic. It is true, of course, that we cannot offer the Russians a fake plan that will bind us but not them. It is also true that the Kremlin will probably reject any but a fake plan. But we must at least attempt a careful new look, if only to close our own ranks and set our record straight before the world. Otherwise the order to build the hydrogen bomb will have the grimmest consequences, very probably beginning with the breakup of the great group of men on the AEC Advisory Commission.

It may seem foolish to launch a difficult diplomatic negotiation just for the record. But the era of the hydrogen bomb will be a new time, making the heaviest demands upon this Nation. Unity, and particularly the unity of the high-minded men who are now criticizing the bomb project, will then be all-important.

Lewis, Acalotti and Billeci Found Guilty

at 509 Margaret dr., Silver Spring, Md. Acalotti, a Thomas Circle news vendor, was named as a numbers writer. He lived at 908 14th st. nw. The jurors announced they had reached a verdict at 10:45 last night just as they were to be taken from the jury room to the Hotel Continental to be locked up for the night.

Holtzoff Summonsed
Judge Holtzoff was summonsed from his home and arrived in court at 11:30 o'clock.

Foreman Arthur C. Morse, 41, 1111 45th pl. se., a Postoffice Department clerk, rose in the jury box.

The clerk of the court asked him: "How say you as to the defendant, William Lewis?" "This jury finds William Lewis is guilty," Morse said after a pause.

The same question was asked and the same answer given as to Acalotti and Billeci.

The panel was polled at the request of defense counsel and each juror said "guilty" three times.

Judge Holtzoff said to the jury: "Your's was the only verdict reasonable under the evidence and law."

The Lewis jurors were excused until Monday morning, but Government attorneys indicated they would be called promptly before the grand jury investigating jury-tampering charges.

Judge Holtzoff warned the jurors to speak to no one but FBI men called in earlier in the day to assist in the investigation.

Defense counsel moved for appeal bond for Lewis and Judge Holtzoff, denying it, said: "Two circumstances appear very important to the court. It appears that in complete defiance of the law the defendant has continued his illicit acts in connection with gambling."

It further appears that in this trial the defense was nothing but a house of cards. Accordingly the defendant Lewis is committed pending sentence."

Immediate Sentencing
Defense attorney William H. Collins then moved for immediate sentencing. Lewis was asked to rise and Judge Holtzoff said: "William Lewis, it is the judgment of this court that you be imprisoned in an institution to be designated by the Attorney General for a period of not less than two months, I mean 10 months, to 30 months."

Billeci was also denied appeal bond and sentenced to serve from 8 to 27 months.

Acalotti, the self-styled "Mayor of Thomas Circle," has been in jail since December 19 when he was convicted of threatening his former sweetheart, Bernice Franklin, a pretty waitress who turned state's evidence 11 months ago to become the key witness in Fay's gambling probe.

Judge Holtzoff was obviously incensed when he made the startling "jury tampering" disclosure yesterday morning. In quick succession, he:

1. Asked Fay to launch an "immediate investigation," and asked him to call in the FBI.
2. Indicated to the seven men and five women jurors he wanted them to bring back a verdict of guilty.
3. Raised the bond of the two defendants not in custody from $1500 to $25,000.
4. Promised the jurors "protection from reprisals."
5. Characterized associates of the defendants attending the trials as "members of the underworld."

Government attorneys gave this version of the jury-tampering charges:

Mrs. Essie L. Kendrick, 54, a bookkeeper of 2808 5th st. ne., told a deputy marshal late Wednesday night that three other women jurors reported receiving threatening calls, and one of these reported receiving an offer of $300 if she voted for a not guilty verdict.

The three other women jurors who were approached, authorities said, are Luraner D. Ivey, 43, charwoman of 49 47th st. se.; Mrs. Josephine G. Moss, 63, 2611 11th st. nw.; and Mrs. Sallie J. Walker, 43, 1329 Montello ave. ne. Mrs. Kendrick reported these facts to Deputy United States Marshal William Hennessey, as the jurors were being walked over to the Continental Hotel Wednesday night to be locked up for the night.

tampering with the jury," and that they should not "frustrate the trial."

The report of "progress" by the jurors last night came at 5:45 p. m., after 16 hours of deliberation and after Judge Holtzoff reminded them that throughout the trial "the Government testimony has gone uncontradicted."

He read them the following paragraph from a 1920 D. C. Court of Appeals opinion upheld by the Supreme Court:

"... Failure by you to bring in a verdict in this case can arise only from a willful and flagrant disregard of the evidence and law."

Defense attorneys again objected vigorously and moved for mistrials every time Judge Holtzoff addressed the jury.

"No Progress, None"
Foreman Arthur C. Morse, 41, 1111 45th pl. se., was asked three times yesterday what progress the jury was making. Early in the morning he said "it was possible" a verdict could be reached with more time. In the early afternoon he reported the jury had made "no progress, none." It was then that Judge Holtzoff quoted from the Court of Appeals opinion.

Three hours later, just before the jurors were dismissed for supper, Morse again was asked by Judge Holtzoff, "What progress have you made?"

"We have made progress, Your Honor," Morse replied.

"The court is delighted to hear that," he said. "But, at the same time, the court feels there are some of you who have been intimidated by the messages received."

"The court wishes to assure you that you will receive protection from the authorities and that you need not fear reprisals."

Indicted Last April
The case is one of 12, involving 36 defendants, springing from indictments returned last April by the special gambling grand jury, which in November concluded its 18-month investigation of what Fay has called "Washington's 100-million-dollar a year gambling racket."

Key witness before the gambling grand jury and in this case was Bernice Franklin, pretty waitress and once Acalotti's sweetheart, who turned State's evidence 11 months ago.

The jurors marched back to the courtroom to resume their deliberations yesterday at 9 a. m. after spending the night locked up in the hotel.

Lewis Reports Late
Judge Holtzoff had notified all attorneys to be in court at 9:30 with the defendants, but Lewis arrived 20 minutes late.

Tension grew during those 20 minutes as Judge Holtzoff would say only, "There is something I want to take up at the earliest possible moment."

With all concerned present and the jurors entering their tenth hour of deliberation, the diminutive judge started the courtroom with the news of jury tampering.

"Shortly before midnight last night the court received an important telephone call from the chief deputy marshal of this court in regard to the Lewis case," he stated.

"The chief deputy marshal stated that he had just received word from one of the deputy marshals in charge of the jury that this deputy marshal was informed by one of the women jurors that several of the other women jurors told her they received threatening telephone calls Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning at their home, and that one of them stated that she received an offer of $300 if she would vote in favor of a verdict of not guilty."

Immediate Investigation
"The court directs the United States attorney immediately to start an investigation into this apparent attempt at jury tampering, which is a crime that strikes at the very vitals of our institutions. The court further directs the United States attorney to institute prosecution of a proceeding to punish the guilty persons for contempt of court, if an investigation discloses sufficient evidence to warrant such action. Perhaps a proceeding for contempt of court might be more expeditious and effective."

"It is utterly impossible for this jury to reach a verdict." Earlier he said "This jury is in extreme disagreement." Before that he had said, "The prospects are not encouraging for an immediate verdict."

Withholds Names
Judge Holtzoff ordered the jurors to resume their deliberations, failing to give further instructions.

Next development in the dramatic day, came at 2 p. m., when Judge Holtzoff summoned the defendants, alone, and read to them the notes he had received from each of two jurors. He said he was withholding their names "to protect them from possible reprisals."

The notes read: "I, _____, have been called by a lady who asked me to be light on Acalotti as he already had one sentence. I asked her for her name and address and she hung up on me."

"I, _____, had a telephone call on Tuesday night from some man, asking me to plead not guilty and that he would give me $300. I then asked his name and he refused. I also asked him if he had talked with any other jurors and he said yes, and he did not mention any names. Then I refused to talk to him any longer."

Defense counsel then told the judge their clients denied any connection with jury tampering. Ford asked the judge for permission to interview Bernice Franklin, implying that she had called the juror on behalf of Acalotti. The judge said he would neither refuse nor grant permission.

Judge Holtzoff then volunteered his opinion about many of the persons who have been attending this trial for 18 days and the previous Lewis trial.

"Unsavory Character"
He said these persons had "impressed the court very unfavorably during the trial," and described them as "apparently members of the underworld, or in any case unsavory characters."

"In addition," he said, "there was one man in the courtroom late last night who was observed signaling one of the jurors. It would have been tactful of counsel to suggest that the friends of the defendants absent themselves."

Ford rose to announce he had done so Wednesday night.

Throughout the day Judge Holtzoff was trying a first-degree murder case, when he was not handling the gambling trial.

At 2:55 the jurors were summonsed from their deliberations a fifth time, and it was then that the

Safe Crackers Get in the Act, Another Gambler Victimized

Now safe crackers are picking N st. nw. He operates a poolroom on the town's gambling gentry.

William P. Moses, 58, at one time described by police as a "millionaire Washington gambler," was robbed of a $75 safe, some gold coins and four shiny half dollars, police disclosed yesterday.

However, this crime was not nearly so spectacular as the recent robberies of Emmitt Warring ($20,000), Robert (Ryebread) Shulman ($17,000), Theodore (Little Joe) Scheve ($2000) and Johnny Williams (between $5000 and $10,000) in which guns were brought into play.

The Moses incident is different, too, in that Moses made an official report to police, something the others have not done.

Moses, who was convicted on gambling charges in 1937, lives in a three-room apartment at 1906 at 1322 14th st. nw. He reported to police that sometime between noon and 3 p. m., Wednesday, while the apartment was unoccupied, someone forced the lock on his front door, entered and stole a 350-pound safe from a hall closet.

The safe, Moses said, contained robberies of Emmitt Warring ($20,000), Robert (Ryebread) Shulman ($17,000), Theodore (Little Joe) Scheve ($2000) and Johnny Williams (between $5000 and $10,000) in which guns were brought into play.

The biggest loss was the safe itself which Moses valued at $75. Lieut. Mike Mahaney, head of the safe squad, said three men were seen hauling the safe down the steps and out into the street by a neighborhood child.

Police, meanwhile, continued their investigations into the other gambler holdups yesterday but had made no arrests.

defendants," and denied renewed motions for a mistrial.

Judge Holtzoff quoted a portion of a charge made by D. C. Police Court judge to a jury in 1919. The charge was affirmed by both the District Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court, with Chief Justice Holmes delivering the majority opinion.

Ford, Ehrlich, Margolius and Collins all issued statements to reporters after the alleged jury tampering was disclosed. Each said jury tampering was an "evil offense," and denied that their clients were in any way involved.

Lewis himself answered "absolutely no," when asked, "Did you have anything to do with tampering with this jury, or did anyone to your knowledge have anything to do with tampering with this jury?"

Bill to Restrict Cotton Acreage Quotas Reported
Legislation to put a limit on cotton acreage cuts for 1950 was cleared by the House Rules Committee yesterday for House consideration, probably today.

The committee allowed three hours for debate on the measure. The bill is designed to correct certain inequities which arose in application of the new cotton acreage allotment act. It cut reduced the country's total cotton acreage from 27 million acres last year to 21 million for 1950.

Many growers complained that as the act worked out in their localities they were cut 50 to 75 percent, compared with the over-all 23 percent reduction.

The bill, worked out by the House Agriculture Committee, would provide that no individual farm allotment be less than the larger of (a) 70 percent of the acreage planted to cotton or war crops in 1946, 1947 and 1948, or (b) 50 percent of the highest amount in any of those three years.

House Gaming Probe Looms

The first step would be to look into the possible connection between Washington gambling operations and those of national gambling syndicates.

To date, Davis said, the subcommittee has been looking into the gambling phase of the crime picture as far as possible with its limited funds.

The House granted the subcommittee $10,000 last fall for its preliminary investigations, and that allowance is now almost used up.

"We've had to use it to cover every phase of crime and law enforcement in Washington," Davis explained.

"Consequently, we have not been able to make any specialized investigation into gambling."

Chairman Davis said that in a coming meeting, which may be called early next week, "we'll consider whether to ask for an additional appropriation to make a special investigation into gambling in the District."

Less Than $100,000
He said no estimate had been made of the amount that would be needed for the work. Asked whether it would require as much as $100,000, Davis said he believes the expense would be less than that.

He said he believes gambling operations here run into millions of dollars. He said the idea of the intensive gambling investigation arose after the House authorized the committee to look into crime and law enforcement here, and that the members of the subcommittee "we had some discussion about it."

If the special gambling inquiry is launched, he said, one of the first steps will be to determine if such activities are purely local or tied in with national organizations.

Hoover concluded: "I think that would make a really good inroad on the problem. It will not stop it entirely, but I think it would be very helpful, from what I have seen of it."

"Gambling today is the next egg of the criminal underworld which operates throughout this country."

A day earlier, Preston had put the same question to Raymond P. Whearty, first assistant to the chief of the criminal division. Whearty said he thought there would be "no objection to such a statute whatsoever."

Whearty Interested
He added: "My reason for that is based in part upon information which has appeared in the press and in magazines, and therefore it is public information that the Department (of Justice) is now engaged in a considerable investigation of gambling activities which involves interstate traffic in gambling functions and articles."

"It would seem that the department would not be so interested and still not be interested in legislation which would effect the elimination of that sort of thing. But that is purely a personal thing—my personal opinion."

Preparing for Conference
Justice is getting the facts together for the forthcoming February 15 crime conference at which President Truman will be represented by the Nation as well as representatives of the major municipal organizations will be present.

The various groups are expected to bring their own ideas for legislation, mostly of a Federal character. A Federal anti-racketeering law already has been called for by Mayor Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles, who will be one of the delegates at the conference.

Meanwhile Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), said yesterday his subcommittee has approved his proposal for a Senate investigation

Bad Records Found By FBI in 177,025 Federal Job Cases

The Federal worker loyalty program has turned up 177,025 persons who were either in Government or who applied for Federal jobs—mainly applicants—as having police records or being of questionable character.

Chief G-man J. Edgar Hoover informed the House Appropriations Committee of these findings, made during routine FBI studies of 2,937,906 fingerprints. He cited several cases of Federal job applicants who had long criminal records, and he added:

"It is people of this type who are kept out of Government, or who are released from Government when these records are disclosed."

In another part of his testimony, Hoover said that 9070 employees had been fired from 1932 up to now as a result of information gathered from fingerprint checks. 2168 others had been reprimanded, and letters of warning had been sent to 4164 others.

The FBI, Hoover said, had handled 2,713,537 loyalty forms and full field investigations were ordered on only 11,403 employees, or four-tenths of 1 percent.

"That I think is an indication that we want only the facts in this program," Hoover said, "and that is why there has been a diminishing criticism of this program in the last several months. . . . This kind of program which results in cleaning out certain types of individuals in the Government is well worthwhile."

The FBI boss added that he had constantly refused, "and I will continue to refuse to disclose the identity of any confidential informant. We will make available to the employing agency all sources of information where it can be done without embarrassing our security."

The FBI is seeking funds to hire 200 additional employees here; 167 clerical employees and 33 supervisors. In its field service, the new FBI budget calls for 291 additional G-men and 186 clerks, or a net over-all increase of 677 employees.

CARD-PUNCHERS: The Census Bureau here has decided to hire about 1200 temporary card-punch operators to work on the 1950 census returns. The punchers won't be hired in big numbers before July. The jobs will be filled from Civil Service registers. It's likely that many experienced punchers who are now working on VA's GI dividend program will be hired by Census. Another 1200 card punch jobs will be set up in Philadelphia.

NOTES: The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation would be able to construct its own building here out of its profits under an Administration-backed bill sponsored by Senator Maybank (D., S. C.). . . . William Frye has resigned as chief of the Defense Department information division, effective February 18, to accept a Federal European post. . . . John Todd, a well-known British mathematician, has been appointed chief of the Bureau of Standards' computation laboratory. His wife will be a special consultant at the bureau. . . . Florida University is giving a new course in Federal Administration and a dozen Government officials will get a vacation out of it. The officials will go to the university for a week each to conduct the course. . . . George Moore, chief of the House Civil Service staff, has been ordered to take a month's rest by his doctor.

THREATS: Fewer threats are being made against the President. The Secret Service reports that it had to investigate only 1925 last year, the smallest in number in several years. In 1946, for example, there were 3351 threats made against the President.

All such cases are investigated by the Secret Service. They mainly involve persons who are mentally sick. Chief U. E. Baughman reports, however, that "our agents have intercepted armed persons who have attempted to enter the White House, and quite often investigations involve persons who have been trained in making and using explosives."

Secret Service agents last year worked 81,352 hours of voluntary overtime, at least they weren't paid for it. Baughman said annual leave of White House police would be restricted this year until he gets the money to hire more men in order to protect the President and his family.

Tramburg Resigns as Director of D. C. Welfare

Head Since 1948
Quits to Accept
Wisconsin Post;
Board Meets Today

For the second time in two years, the District Board of Public Welfare will be confronted at its meeting today with the task of finding a new welfare director.

John W. Tramburg resigned from the post yesterday to accept a position as State Director of Welfare of his home State of Wisconsin. In a letter of resignation to Board Chairman Edgar Morris, he effective February 24.

Tramburg, 37, was named director of public welfare here in May 1948, to succeed the late Ray L. Huff. He didn't apply for the job, but was selected over six persons who did. At the time, Tramburg was superintendent of the Industrial Home School.

Appointment of a successor will be made by the Commissioners from recommendations of the welfare board.

Selected for the Wisconsin post from 28 applicants, Tramburg was first interviewed for the job during a Christmas visit there and then again last weekend. One of his chief reasons for applying, he said, was that it would place him only 22 miles from his home town of Fall River.

Taking stock of the District's welfare activities as he leaves them, Tramburg said he has been greatly encouraged by the growth of "public understanding and faith in what we're doing."

On the dollars-and-cents side, he pointed out that the 1951 budget, as sent to Congress would allow a two-million-dollar start on much-needed capital improvements. "It's one of the best we've ever had," he added.

Tramburg said he will make a complete report to the board on department activities before he leaves.

Tramburg came here in 1939 as a juvenile court probation officer. Three years later he became assistant superintendent of the Industrial Home School.

In 1946, after three years in the Navy, he returned as superintendent. He was named director of public welfare here in May 1948, to succeed the late Ray L. Huff.

McGrew, 24, operator of a grocery store at Hunting Hill, Montgomery County, suffered first and second degree burns. He was taken to Suburban Hospital by the Rockville Rescue Squad.

Squad members said a faulty carburetor threw gasoline into the chassis of the truck as McGrew was driving along a dirt road off Route 28 in Hunting Hill.

Loss included the body of the truck, deep freeze, refrigerator, and a small stock of groceries.

Fairfax Forum Slated Tonight

A forum on Fairfax County's proposed $10,500 school bond issue will be held at 8 p. m. today at Franklin-Sherman Elementary School, McLean.

Slated to reply to questions from the floor at the no-speech meeting, according to John T. Lynch, president of the school P.T.A., are W. T. Woodson, school superintendent; F. W. Robinson, school board chairman; and G. Wallace Carper, chairman of the Board of Supervisors. Lynch also said Virginia State Senator Andrew W. Clarke plans to attend. The public is invited.

Mother, 35, Hurt, but Repels Attacker With Piece of Pipe

A 35-year-old mother fought off an assailant who broke into her house on Monday morning, escaping with a possible fractured skull.

Mrs. Jeannie Williams told police that about 9:20 a. m. a man entered the 60-foot cabin cruiser Gadabout on which she lives with her husband and three children, and ordered her to disrobe and get into the bunk. He was armed with a foot-long piece of pipe, she said.

She attempted to use the telephone, but he tore it from her, hitting her on the back of the head with the pipe, Mrs. Williams told police.

She struggled with him, wrestled away the pipe, and struck him over the right eye with it. She also bit him on the left wrist or hand, she told police. He ran off

Mail to Bear Special Sesqui Cancellation

The Washington Postoffice, beginning March 1, will cancel all mail with a new die bearing these words:

"National Capital Sesquicentennial 1800-1950."

Some 55 million letters a month pass through the local postoffice, according to officials of the Sesquicentennial Commission who made the announcement yesterday.

The cancellation will be used for the rest of 1950.

Meanwhile, the Sesqui made public a financial report as of December 31, 1949, showing actual expenditures of $51,575 plus commitments, transfers and advances of about $275,000.

Included in the latter figure, the commission said, are $100,000 each for the Rock Creek amphitheater and the art show planned for the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

Since the commission came into being, a total of $25,448 has been spent for administration of which $17,795 is charged against the Freedom Fair and $8331 against other Sesqui events.

Lee Highway Fire Destroys House, Injures Fireman

A spectacular fire that destroyed a two-floor frame dwelling and injured one fireman was witnessed by thousands of commuters along Lee Highway at 5:15 p. m. yesterday, causing many of them to be rerouted.

Six Fairfax County volunteer fire companies responded to the blaze, which virtually leveled a combination apartment-storage building just off the highway, near West st., and adjoining the Ancient Oak Trailer Camp.

Fireman Herbert Spalding of the Dunn Loring squad was treated at Arlington Hospital for an injured ankle.

Living in the second-floor apartment were Mr. and Mrs. Joe Fisher. Mrs. Fisher said she was cooking supper when the oil stove exploded, squirting fiery liquid over the room.

The boat is docked at Gregory's Boatyard, 820 Maine ave. sw., and is owned by Silas Williams, husband of the victim, a Government employee. According to a boatyard official, William L. Howard, only a 2½-year-old child was on board the boat with Mrs. Williams at the time of the incident. The husband was at work and two other older children were at school, he said.

By Bill Brinkley

Post Reporter

The Washington public today will have the opportunity to view a genetics of wonder-of-wonders—if it's still alive.

It's a 3-pound, 3-week-old hybrid bear cub now resting in a straw-filled box in the Zoo's lion house. It has already lived longer than any other hybrid bear cub born to hybrid bear parents.

Today will be the first time since animals began, said Zoo Director William M. Mann, that the humans have been able to see such a specimen. He almost ran out of superlatives in describing why.

"It shouldn't have been born at all. It violates all the laws of zoology and biology, of Mendel and Darwin, of . . . It violates the laws of everything."

As such, the little fistful of fur is one of the most exciting things ever to hit this or any other Zoo. To geneticists, Zoo officials and the public in general, it would be fascinating beyond words if it lived.

For right now it looks very much like its Alaskan bear grandmother. The intriguing thing would be to see the changes if it lived. Maybe it would look like its polar bear grandfather next.

Then possibly like both a polar bear and an Alaskan brown bear. But because of its peculiar biology, the chances against the cub's living are monumental, says Doctor Mann.

As if this weren't enough, the cub has had to be taken away from its mother—who has become skittish. But for this the public would not have seen it at all now.

This is ironic indeed. Because usually, it's difficult to save even a normal cub deprived of mama's milk.

The cub is the sole survivor of a litter of six hybrids. When the parents were born of a polar bear father and an Alaskan brown bear mother, it was the first reported births from such a union.

When these hybrids had a litter last year it was another genetics first—as if mules had had offspring. The geneticists got all excited. That litter died.

It's a miracle of miracles that the new cub has lived the three weeks.

The cub gets a bottle of milk four or five times a day. In its straw filled box in the lion house it seems quite unaware of the genetics storm raging over its task.

GWU Gives Certificates To 26 Naval Officers

Twenty-six Naval officers who have completed five terms of study under the Holloway Plan at George Washington University will receive certificates during a special ceremony at 4 p. m. today in Lisner Auditorium, 21st and H sts. nw.

Rear Admiral Frank T. Watkins, assistant chief for personnel control of the Bureau of Naval Personnel, will be the principal speaker. Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, university president, will extend greetings, and Dean Elmer L. Kayser, marshal, will announce the exercises.

Civitan Club to Dance

The Alexandria Civitan Club will observe its seventeenth anniversary with a dinner-dance at 8 p. m. Saturday in the Belle Haven Country Club. Comdr. William J. Lederer, U. S. N., will be the chief speaker. Paul Woodson, president, said, Lederer is chief of the magazine and book section, Department of Defense public relations division, and the author of two books to be published this spring.

$2,877,700 Low Bid Wins Spingarn Job

The Kramer-Vollmerhausen Co., Inc., of 2601 Connecticut ave. nw., submitted a low bid of $2,877,700 for the construction of the new Spingarn High School, it was announced yesterday.

The Negro school, to be built at 24th st. and Benning rd. ne., will contain 36 classrooms, 21 special rooms, an auditorium, two gymnasiums, a cafeteria and rifle range.

Archibute Hutson, director of construction for the District, said that work will begin as soon as the contract is signed. The school is scheduled for completion in two years.

The bid was the lowest of 11 submitted. The high bid was $3,246,000.

D. C. to Hire 53 Teachers To Ease Negro School Jam

Immediate employment of 53 teachers to ease overcrowding in Negro schools was authorized yesterday by the District Commissioners.

Budget Officer Walter Fowler said that the salary cost of $81,045 will be paid out of unused school funds. The teachers will be employed January 30 for the second school semester.

A letter from school officials to the Commissioners said the positions were necessary to "keep the instructional program from falling below standards established by the Board of Education."

To be employed are seven kindergarten teachers, 31 elementary teachers, one special junior high teacher for the sight-speech program and three senior high teachers for shop programs.

School officials requested the positions in 1951 budget estimates but asked for them now because of overcrowding.

The letter to the commissioners said the kindergarten teachers will bring the average number of children per teacher down to 50.

The officials said they really need 68 elementary teachers to cut class sizes to 36 but because of building limitations only asked for 31 at this time. The junior-high teachers will reduce classes to 28 students, the letter said.

All-Veteran Slate Elected By Greenbelt

Move Designed To Assure City Top Priority in Dealing With U. S.

Greenbelt citizens moved last night to perfect an all-veteran organization to negotiate with Public Housing Administration for purchase of the city by its present residents.

Meeting at the Greenbelt Veterans Housing Corporation, the group elected a board of directors of seven veterans so that the city will be assured top veterans' priority when the Government disposes of its 1800 homes.

The board of directors named last night were: J. Walsh Barcus, Bruce Bowman, Eric T. Braund, Benjamin Goldfaden, Henry R. Pearlman, Michael H. Salzman and Morris A. Sandhaus.

A separate advisory board of nonveterans was also elected, consisting of: Paul N. Borsky, Sherrod East, Wells B. Harrington, Mrs. E. W. Meredith, Thomas B. Ritchie, Anthony Maddar and George Eshbaugh.

The advisory members will cooperate with the official committee until such time as they can legally be added to the board of directors. The meeting at the Greenbelt School brought some evidence of dissension over the choice of an all-veteran board.

Several speakers objected to the exclusion of nonveterans who have had wide experience in mental housing problems, but a heated discussion was terminated by an appeal from Mrs. Elizabeth Harrington, a member of the city council, who called for a unity "at a time when our homes are at stake."

It was on Mrs. Harrington's motion that the homeowners agreed to have the nonveterans advisory board incorporated into the board of directors at a later date.

The veterans' group was formed last June to negotiate for purchase of the homes by Greenbelt tenants but, until last night, the board of directors had included nonveterans as well as former servicemen. An all-veteran board was recommended by its officials to assure the group of veterans' priorities in the negotiations.

Youth in Car Crash Dies Of Pneumonia

An 18-year-old Clifton, Va., youth, injured December 4 when the car he was riding in crashed into two telephone poles, died of pneumonia at 3:05 a. m. yesterday at Arlington Hospital.

Hospital attaches said the boy, Henry R. Detwiler of Clifton, contracted pneumonia as a result of the injuries.

Young Detwiler was passenger in a car driven by Charles W. Pearson, 22, of Route 1, Clifton, when the car left the road on a curve on Route 123, 500 yards south of the Oakland School. Pearson has been charged with reckless driving. A hearing on the charge has not been scheduled.

Fairfax Board Urged to Build More Schools, Plan for Future

Two Baileys Crossroads organizations warned last night that immediate steps should be taken to provide more schools to relieve present overcrowding and to prepare for 941 area children of preschool age.

The Baileys Crossroads Elementary School Parent-Teacher Association and the Woman's Club of Baileys Crossroads called on the Fairfax County School Board and State Senator Andrew Clarke to investigate action "early enough to avoid the compounding of an already intolerable situation."

In a two-week census conducted jointly by 50 members of the groups, it was found that the present 40-year-old school, plus a Quonset addition, with a total capacity of 180 students, now has 293.

In addition, the report said, construction had either commenced

30-Day Notice Newspaper Vendors Are Told to Move

Newspaper and magazine vendors occupying public space on city streets yesterday were told to seek action from the District Commissioners with a view to changing police regulations, or get off the streets.

The warning was given yesterday by Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark King to some 20 downtown vendors summoned to appear before him at a hearing in the Municipal Court.

King set a 30-day limit in which time the vendors must take action before the Commissioners or face prosecution for violating present police regulations forbidding use of public space for sale of merchandise.

King charged that the amount of space preempted by news vendors has increased so that it has become a hazard to pedestrians and has exposed the city to personal injury damage suits from persons who may stumble over the piles of papers and magazines.

He told the group that "you men should approach the District Commissioners with the idea of seeing if some reasonable regulations could not be worked out without interfering with the public."

King suggested perhaps that rules could be revised to provide legal vending at a certain safe distance from crosswalks and proposed that vendors might agree to posting an indemnity bond to protect the District in damage suits.

Vendors from the following locations were involved in yesterday's proceedings: 14th and F sts. nw., 13th and F sts. nw., 13th and G sts. nw., 12th and F sts. nw., 12th and G sts. nw., 11th and G sts. nw., 7th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw., 10th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw., 11th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw., 13th and E sts. nw., 14th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw., and 14th and H sts. nw.

ADA Backs McAuliffe Appointment

Recent action of the Board of Education in rejecting Miss Eleanor P. McAuliffe as principal of the new Sousa Junior High School is "a severe blow to the cause of good education in the District," the Washington Chapter of Americans for Democratic Action said yesterday.

In a letter to members of the School Board, Benjamin C. Sigal, president of the group, urged the board to "consider the appointment on its merits and grant the proper weight to the recommendations of the professionally qualified persons in a position to know the facts."

He said the ADA "noted with consternation" that the board rejected the candidate recommended by Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning.

"It would appear rather fundamental that no educational system can be expected to function satisfactorily if the lay members of a board of education . . . are to substitute their whims for the carefully considered recommendations of those professionally qualified persons concerned with and charged with the day-to-day operations of the system," the letter said.

Rail Detective Shoots Prowler In Jersey Yards

A Pennsylvania railroad detective told local police last night that he shot a 47-year-old District resident in self-defense, when he started toward him with a knife.

Earl M. Brown, 29, of Route 3, Fairfax, the detective, said he saw a man tampering with a loaded boxcar in the Jersey Yards, 1st and New Jersey ave. se. He ran over to investigate, saw the man first duck under the car and emerge with a knife in his hand. Brown said he shot him with his .32-caliber revolver, as he came toward him.

The victim was identified as Gallinger Hospital as Edward Pierce, 47, of 68 Logan ct. nw. He was treated for a bullet wound in his hip, and placed under armed guard.

Board Urges Repeal of Personal Effects Tax

Capitol Hill Cool Toward Abolishing Of Levy on Jewelry, Household Property

By Richard L. Lyons
Post Reporter

The Commissioners yesterday gave general approval to a proposal that the District personal property tax on household effects be abolished.

However, the plan to wipe out the tax as of July 1, 1951, with a possible 1-cent increase in the cigarette tax, drew a cool initial response on Capitol Hill. It would require an act of Congress to eliminate the tax.

The abolition of the $2 per $100 tax levied on household furnishings, jewelry and other tangible property not held for sale was proposed by District Assessor Edward A. Dent. The tax, he said, is "very difficult to administer, susceptible of inequalities and . . . undoubtedly the most unpopular form of taxation."

"Favorably Inclined"

Personal property taxes on automobiles and businesses would remain. These two items yield 90 percent of the personal property tax collections.

The Commissioners were "favorably inclined" to Dent's proposal and suggested an increase in the one-cent package tax on cigarettes, if necessary, to make up the difference, a spokesman said. They have asked for a report from Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler, however, before giving final approval and asking the necessary legislation from Congress.

There were these reactions from Congressmen concerned with District affairs:

Representative Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), chairman of the House Subcommittee on District Tax Legislation, said that, after all the work last session of obtaining adequate revenue measures for the District, "they'd have to show me."

Senator Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.), chairman of a corresponding subcommittee in the Senate said: "I had hoped there would be no District tax legislation in this session," but reserved specific comment until he has conferred with the "Good Arithmetic."

Senator Robert C. Hendrickson (R., N. J.), member of the Senate District Committee, thought the idea of raising the cigarette tax and abolishing the personal property tax didn't "make good arithmetic."

Fowler indicated to reporters that he will recommend that the Commissioners approve Dent's proposal.

Dent said most persons are filing personal property tax returns. But because the individual taxpayer acts as his own appraiser, payments are unequal, he said.

Surveys by his office show some persons paying three or four times the amount paid by others on comparable property.

Dent attributed this primarily to the taxpayer's uncertainty as to the true value of his belongings.

On the other hand, the personal property tax on business should be retained, he said, because most firms keep complete records of property depreciation and merchandise.

He estimated that most, if not all, of the taxes lost on household effects ($296,837 assessed in fiscal 1950) could be made up by reassigning personnel to business returns.

1950's First and Foremost Fine Cars

The NEW Lincolns

NOTHING could be finer—inside or out—than the beautiful new 1950 Lincoln and the magnificent new 1950 Lincoln Cosmopolitan now on display in our showrooms.

Outwardly, their superb new body styling stamps them as being the most distinctive fine cars in America. Inwardly, their rich new upholsteries and appointments make them the most luxurious, too.

Today, these new Lincolns offer you an entirely new conception of automotive elegance—for their brilliantly fashioned new "Salon Styled" interiors are definitely the most beautiful in the world.

And on the road, their new range of performance is unquestionably in a class by itself. In the thick of traffic, or on the wide open highway, they are a sheer joy to drive...instantly alert...powerfully responsive. Just a few minutes behind the wheel will convince you that nothing could be finer in action than the great high compression Lincoln "INVINCIBLE 8" engine combined with HYDRA-MATIC...with freedom forever from gear shift and clutch pedal! It is unlike anything you have ever driven before.

And nothing, you will also discover, could be easier than Lincoln's new velvet-touch steering...or more comfortable than its new weather control system...or more restful than its new Fiberglas soundproofing...or more relaxing than the wonderfully soft Lincoln springing.

Frankly, here are automobiles which, for craftsmanship and quality, as well as for excellence of engineering, simply have no peers today.

If you haven't yet made an appointment with us, by all means do so now. Once you drive the new 1950 Lincoln or new 1950 Lincoln Cosmopolitan, you, too, will be certain that nothing could be finer. And we promise you'll be pleasantly surprised about the prices.

*Optional at extra cost

Pritchett Case Due to Reach Jury Today

A District Court jury of eight men and four women today is scheduled to begin deliberations as to the guilt or innocence of Fred S. Pritchett, charged with first degree murder in the July slaying of Clyde L. King.

King, an engineer, was shot to death in the cab of his switch engine at the Eckington yards of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

In final arguments yesterday, Prosecutor Richard Roberts contended that, following an argument with King, Pritchett, with deliberate intent, procured a pistol, walked to the yards and shot King.

Defense counsel argued that King was fatally wounded after he pulled a gun on Pritchett and a scuffle for its possession followed.

From Boxing, Not Booze

Jenkins Says He Had '8-Year-Hangover'

By Red Smith

NEW YORK, Jan. 26 (NYHT).—Lew Jenkins, who went out of style as lightweight champion more than eight years ago, dropped into the International Boxing Club's counting house yesterday to collect his wages for getting his face punched off by Walter Haines.

The old songwriter from Sweetwater, Tex., is a philosopher who accepts what life and luck provide. Like the trunks they handed him to wear in the match with Haines:

"Do you think they'll do, Lew?" a representative of the boxing commissioner asked, for the drooping drawers could have gone half again around Jenkins' negligible waist.

"I guess so," Lew said equably, "allus I gotta do is wear suspenders."

He boxed eight rounds with Haines and went oh-for-eight. "When you get to be my age," he said cheerfully, "you either have it or you don't."

"Thirty-three's not so old, Lew," somebody said, and Jenkins grinned crookedly through his bruises.

"I AIN'T TALKIN' about my birthdays, I'm talkin' about my experiences. After all, I had a hangover for eight years."

With Lew's midweek chore completed, Murray Goodman wanted to talk about tonight's card in Madison Square Garden. Six bright and rising kids are appearing in three 10-rounders—Rocky Castellani against Ernie Durando, Joe Miceli with Raoul Perez, and Jimmy Rooney against Eddie Marotta.

The literary tentacle of Octopus, Inc., was saying you could go a distance of ground and wait a good many months without seeking three such matches on a single card, all involving colorful comers not yet 24 years old.

"We've got an orphan in there," Mr. Goodman said, "and a guy used to mix ink in an ink-factory and another that's a clothes-wringer out of a laundry and..."

"An orphan?" somebody said. "Is that good?"

"REMINDS ME," Harry Markson said, "of one time a manager was telling me about a kid he had. Told me how this boy was an orphan and how he picked him up and brought him along and so on, the usual story. Well, the boy boxed here some and then he wasn't around for a few years. I'd forgotten about him when I bumped into the manager and he started talking about the kid again."

"Oh, yes, I said, 'I remember you telling me about him three or four years ago. You said he was an orphan.'"

"Yes," the guy said, "and he still is!"

Jack Hurley was on for one of his rare visits to New York and he was sitting still and not talking, which is rarer still. Jack's visits from Chicago always are an occasion, for wherever he goes good stories develop. Maybe he'll have a great fighter like Billy Petrolle, or maybe only a character like the late Vince Foster. But wherever Hurley is, boredom isn't.

At length he spoke up: "I gotta great fighter. Harry Matthews out of Seattle. Seventy-four fights, 71 wins. He's as good as anybody around now."

"You going to bring him East?"

"He's here." Jack went into another office and came back with a strapping young man with straight features, a big sloping neck, wavy brown hair. "Start talking, Harry," Hurley said, "and I'll fill in." This was a form reversal. Usually Jack starts talking and nobody fills in.

MATTHEWS' STORY on his own lips is slightly better than Matthews' story in the record books. In minor details that is, like the matter of his age which he counts as 27. He said he had his first professional bout at the age of 9 in his hometown of Ola, Idaho—"a store, a church, a postoffice and a school"—receiving a $5 purse and $3 more which the customers flung into the ring.

At 17 he was boxing main events in the Northwest. In 1942 he won a decision over Al Hostak, who had won and lost the middleweight championship and subsequently he boxed a draw with Hostak, the only "name" fighter he has met.

"When I came to Jack," he said, "I had been fighting for years and I thought I knew something. I knew nothing, not a thing. He showed me things I never knew existed in boxing."

"He didn't even know enough to eat," Hurley said. "He was taking two skimpy little meals a day trying to stay a middleweight. Now he weighs 175 and he knows when he hits a guy, the guy has to go down. His last two bouts he belted the first guy out in 40 seconds and the other in 49."

"Thirty-nine," Matthews said. "The announcer told me."

"That's what I thought, too," Hurley told him. "I thought you broke a record by a second. But the papers said 49, so we have to accept it."

"Well," Matthews said. "It don't matter."

Missed Last Season With Injury

McCosky, Recuperating, Plans Comeback With A's This Year

Philadelphia, Jan. 26 (AP).—Barney McCosky, baseball's forgotten man, mailed in his signed contract to the Philadelphia Athletics today and announced he's going to give baseball one more try.

The 31-year-old outfielder, who built up a 320 lifetime average with the Detroit Tigers and the Athletics, missed the entire 1949 season, suffering a back ailment.

He told Earle Mack, assistant manager of the A's, that he has undergone extensive surgery to get back in playing shape and that he'll be ready to head south for spring training March 1.

McCosky wrote that he underwent a three-hour operation last month to "relieve pressure on a pinched nerve at the base of the spine."

He said that in the operation a piece of skin was removed from the top of his left hip and grafted on the lower vertebrae to make the vertebrae stronger.

"I needed two blood transfusions during the operation," said McCosky. "It was plenty rough sleeping on my back for 10 days after that. It was like sleeping on canvas with those stitches in my back."

The doctors placed his back in a cast "to prevent me from bending," McCosky said, "and they won't take it off until March 1."

"I'm praying for a speedy recovery," he concluded, "and I want to start out where I left off."

That would be a good place to begin. In 1948, McCosky finished high among American League batters with a .326 mark in 135 games. His hitting was a major factor in the A's strong pennant run throughout most of that season.

Marlene Bauer Wins, 7-6, Now Tourney Favorite

15-Year-Old Texan's Play Tops of 150

By James F. Fowler

Miami, Fla., Jan. 26 (AP).—Tiny Marlene Bauer became undisputed favorite in the eighteenth annual Helen Lee Doherty Women's Amateur golf tournament today as she posted a lopsided 7 and 6 victory over Claire Doran of Cleveland, Ohio.

The petite 5-foot-2-inch Midland, Tex., brunette who celebrates her sixteenth birthday next month, continued to score the best golf in the field of some 150 contestants.

After 46 holes of competitive golf she was just two strokes over men's par. Her 5 under women's par 71 won her medalist honors. Yesterday she was one over men's par for 34 holes and today she scored a 37 going out and was 2 over men's par on the twelfth hole where the match ended.

The shapely Texan, wearing a pink ribbon in her hair, held a five up lead at the end of nine holes. They halved the 10th with women's par 55 then Marlene won the 11th and 12th with even men's par to finish the match.

Alice Bauer Beaten

Alice Bauer, her 22-year-old sister, couldn't match the putting pace set by Polly Riley of Fort Worth, Texas, and lost her second round match 3 and 2. Miss Kirby, who last week won the Tampa Women's Open Tournament, carded even women's par 38 on the front nine for a three hole margin at the turn.

Marlene and her sister have been finalists in six tournaments. Alice has won four and Marlene two.

All contestants were bothered today by a gusty 20 mile an hour wind which played over the 6347-yard Miami Country Club Course. Women's par is 38-38-76.

Jean Hopkins, 29-year-old Cleveland, Ohio, veteran of many tournaments, remained a top favorite by defeating Eileen Stull of Augusta, Ga. 3 and 2. Miss Hopkins, who yesterday upset defending champion, Paula Patton, scored a two-over women's par on the front nine to turn three up.

D. C. Pair Gains Handball Finals

Top seeded Sam Papandrew and John Moud of Washington advanced to the double final of the national YMCA four wall handball tournament by eliminating Alfred Zepp and Ed Blank of Buffalo, 7-21, 21-15, 21-19, last night at the YMCA.

The other doubles team which will compete in the Saturday championship match are Bill Felson and Tony Caballero of Boston, 17-21, 21-13, 21-19, conquerors of Washington's Jack Schwartz and Phil Schneider.

Wilner AZA Ties for Lead

The Wilner AZA tied the Bulls for the second half lead in the Jewish Community Center's Junior Basketball League by defeating the Ulips Goats, 40-36, yesterday at the center. Herb Skunking put in a mid-court set shot with 15 seconds to play to win the game.

The Bulls and the Wilner AZA have both won three games and lost none.

Gemonge's 26 Pace Arlington Hall Victory

Don Gemonge scored 26 points and led Arlington Hall to an 81-49 victory over South Post, Fort Myer, last night in a military district of Washington basketball game at Fort Myer. Gemonge scored 36 last Tuesday when Arlington Hall romped over Army Medical Center, 103-36.

THE cluttered bit of kitchen artillery that Miss Mary Turner (left) is showing to a young assistant, Miss Ellen Bono, is the first electric range, built 40 years ago.

Home Service 'Pioneer' Reminisces

T-Model Car—and Stove—Just a Memory Now

By Lucia Brown

TWENTY-FIVE years ago, a red-haired girl in a T-model Ford made the first home service call for a power company in the Washington area.

Yesterday, Miss Mary Turner, chic and pretty as ever, observed her quarter-century anniversary as head of the department she started.

Her employers—the Potomac Electric Power Co.—gave a party in honor of the event at Electric Institute. The festivities also marked the seventh anniversary of Home Service Daily, the company's popular radio feature with Elinor Lee on WTOP.

Reminiscing about past years in home service work was the order of the day—and Mary Turner had plenty to reminisce about.

When she started to work, the electric range was a high-slung affair with bow legs and a temperamental oven, a far cry from today's sleek, accurate equipment. Her company offered only one service in the home—calls on customers to give advice about the proper use of the range.

Many Services Today

Today, they have many services—cooking schools, kitchen planning, home lighting, recipe booklets, radio program, lecture demonstrations in schools, and the home calls. Her department in 1925 consisted of one—and that one herself, a scared little pioneer—while today there are 20 on her staff.

"I used to get so cold driving that T-model I often had to stop and sit on my hands to warm them," Miss Turner recalls. She and her first assistant, Miss Elizabeth Fisher (who is still with the department), both had plenty of weird experiences in those early days.

Once, Miss Fisher called on a hermit who was nevertheless progressive enough to enjoy electric-cookery. He had a huge pan stretching over two burners of the range and a foot-high stack of flapjacks.

"You must be planning a big lunch," said Miss Fisher.

"Oh no!" he replied. "I cook up a batch of 'em, then eat on 'em all week."

Remember First School

MISS TURNER remembers her first cooking school only too well. Just three people turned up at the old power company building at 14th and C sts. nw. (In later years, she was to teach a school attended by 4000).

Then there was the time Miss Fisher was explaining the electric oven in a customer's kitchen

The customer's husband came in, spied Miss Fisher leaning over the oven and thought it was his wife. Playfully, he booted her into the oven, much to Miss Fisher's surprise—and his, too, when he saw his wife standing in the corner!

Miss Turner, a Washington native, attended Notre Dame Academy and George Washington University. She was not long out of school when she took over the home economist's job, one of the first of its type in the country.

Her department today has been widely recognized as outstanding. McCall's Magazine gave it an achievement award and other companies study it as a model.

"Home Service Daily," the radio program started in 1943, has attracted a total of 207,000 calls for assistance and booklets. (Most popular item has been its "Holiday Recipes.") With talented home economist Elinor Lee in charge, it received several wartime citations, has earned widespread recognition since as a homemaker's helper. One hundred faithful listeners—picked at random from the files—were guests at yesterday's party.

Fish, Chicken Budget Buys This Week

FISH, chicken, and pork all offer good chances to buy main dishes at budget prices over the coming weekend.

BEST FISH BUYS are sea bass, white and yellow perch, Boston and Spanish mackerel, and fillets of haddock and flounder. A few shad are poking their noses over local fish counters and there's a good supply of swordfish, but these are a luxury item. Shrimp prices are high and the supply is scarce, too.

FRYING CHICKEN WEEK—it's in progress right now—is designed to call your attention to the great abundance of tender lightweight chickens. How about a sizzling platterful with good cream gravy? To make it, mix 2 tablespoons flour and 2 tablespoons drippings and all the little brown bits left in the frying pan. Add gradually—with constant stirring—1½ cups cold milk. Cook slowly until smooth and thickened. Season to taste and serve hot.

DRIED BEANS AND PEAS are among the most plentiful foods for the current week, says the Department of Agriculture. They suggest a dish of succulent black-eyed peas to go with that country-fried chicken.

Fashion Show Gets Extras

All This, and Philanthropy, Too!

By Peggy Preston

THE ways things are adding up, it looks as though Tuesday's benefit fashion show-luncheon at the Mayflower is going to be the biggest and best yet.

Sponsored by the Women's Board of Providence Hospital, proceeds will go toward furnishing a nursery in the proposed new hospital. To further this aim, here is what the committee, headed by Mrs. James Fadeley, is offering ticketholders:

A parade of dramatic gowns, the handiwork of Castillo, designer for Elizabeth Arden... Dazzling jewels by Cartier... Chance of a roundtrip flight to Puerto Rico and a week's stay at the new Caribe Hilton in San Juan... Four Arden models, imported from New York for the occasion, their ranks to be augmented by several of Washington's own lovelies... Miss Arden, herself, as guest of honor.

And, of course, a good luncheon, slated for 12:30 p. m. sharp in the hotel's main ballroom.

Nor is that quite all, Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, Jr., is lending her necklace of black pearls, bequeathed her by Evelyn Walsh McLean. It's to be worn with one of Castillo's more fabulous evening gowns. Another member of the Robert household will participate in the charity project. Mrs. Robert's dapper French poodle, Co-Co, will take his turn on the runway. His costume: a hat designed for him by Miss Arden.

Holiday Theme

THEME of the show will be "A Winter Holiday in the Caribbean," a fitting background for the spring and summer collection.

John Greer, local decorator and display artist, is staging the show with a backdrop of Puerto Rican symbols. All this ties in with another feature of the event, a chance to win a roundtrip to the island and a stay at the swank Caribe Hilton. This is being sponsored jointly by the Cardinal Squadron, local group of the Air Force Association, and the Hilton Hotels International.

Television fans will have an opportunity to see a condensed version of the fashion show Friday night on the "Meet Mrs. Markel" program. Two Arden models will fly from New York for the telecast and will show eight of the Castillo gowns.

More than 60 costumes will be featured at the luncheon. They will range from suits and day dresses to spectacular evening gowns for which Castillo, a Spanish-born designer who trained in Paris, is well known. Red, the color he always prefers, is strong throughout the group, but his favorite for spring is yellow, which is offered in a variety of shades.

First Showing

THIS will be the first showing of the Castillo collection for spring outside of New York. It will be returned to that city the same night and be shown at a charity event there the following day before an estimated 3000 persons.

Fashion show committee members include Lady Berenson, honorary board member; Mrs. Howard Mitchell, Mrs. Francis Little, Mrs. A. Magruder MacDonald, Mrs. Charles E. McEnerney, Mrs. Joseph Monaghan, Mrs. J. Raymond Raedy, president of the board, and Mrs. Victor Skinner.

New Magazine Makes Debut

FLAIR, newest publishing venture of Cowles Magazine, Inc., making its debut on newsstands today, challenges women to express their own individuality in fashion and the home, as well as in the arts.

The home theme is highlighted by a beautifully illustrated article on the Paris house of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. In the fashion department, Flair urges every woman to choose unerringly the clothes and colors that are right for her, regardless of "what fashion dictates."

Published by the editors of Look and Quick, Flair's staff is headed by Fleur Cowles, wife of Gardner Cowles, president of Cowles Magazine, Inc. An associate editor of Look, she achieved editorial distinction as organizer and director of the women's department of that publication.

Her staff includes George Davis as managing editor; Louis-Marie Eude, art director, and Arnold Gingrich, general manager. Paris editor of Flair is Margaret Thompson Biddle.

Cantacuzene Cousins Wed In St. Paul's Church, London

London, Jan. 26 (AP).—A great-granddaughter of President Ulysses S. Grant was married today to a descendant of an Emperor of Constantinople.

The bride was lovely Barbara Hanbury-Williams, 19, and the bridegroom, Prince Michael Cantacuzene, 35. They are cousins. Miss Hanbury-Williams is the daughter of Sir John Coldbrook Hanbury-Williams, chairman of the huge British rayon and textile combine, Courtauld's, and a director of the Bank of England.

The bride is the granddaughter of Madame Cantacuzene of Washington, who was Julia Dent Grant. The bridegroom is her nephew.

The prince is sales manager for a French rayon firm.

The wedding was performed in historic St. Paul's Church. It was followed by a reception at the Dorchester Hotel. The couple kept their honeymoon plans a secret, but said they will live in France.

Julia Grant, granddaughter of Abraham Lincoln's hard-fighting general, was married to Michael Cantacuzene, uncle of the present prince.

She was the grandmother of the former Princess Zenaide Cantacuzene, who became the wife of Sir John in 1928 and is Miss Hanbury-Williams' mother.

The house of Cantacuzene descended from an Emperor of Constantinople in 1342.

Tea and Talk Will Entertain Kenmore Group

There'll be a tea and talk at the Sulgrave Club for members of the D. C. Chapter of the Kenmore Association on Thursday, February 9. Mrs. Horace Smith, national secretary of the association will lecture on Kenmore, historic Fredericksburg home of Betty Washington, sister of George Washington. Films of this outstanding example of colonial architecture will accompany the talk.

The committee in charge of the tea consists of Mrs. Edward Russell True, jr., District of Columbia Regent of the Kenmore Association; Mrs. Albert J. Bewley, vice regent; Mrs. J. Holmes Branson, jr., Mrs. Chester M. Carre, Miss Mary Kay Lewis, collateral descendant of the original owners; Mrs. Fred A. Mitchell, Mrs. Norman L. Munster, Mrs. Thomas H. Talliaferro, first District regent of the association, and Mrs. George Y. Worthington.

Mrs. Smith will bring with her for sale at the tea a quantity of tasty gingerbread mix, a delicacy served at Kenmore, made from the recipe used by Mary Washington when she entertained the Marquis de Lafayette.

Fashion Communique:

Duchess Really Wears The New Short Length; She's Got Figure For It

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

THIS AND THAT OF A LOVELY WEEK

Want to know what the Duchess of Windsor wore when she dined with the Douglas MacArthur 2d? A short, short, street-length evening dress, so expensively simple as to be almost indescribable, of goldy-caramel satin. It was extremely décolleté with plain narrow shoulder straps, the intricate drapery of the medium full skirt continuing up bodice to décolletage. Her Grace's slippers were plain and gold. And, contrary to the current craze for gobby necklaces, the Duchess' wonderfully youthful throat was unadorned. Her main jewels were a pair of diamond clips, brilliant as searchlights, side by side at neckline. The dress, incidentally, could have been worn only by a woman with a perfect, really perfect, figure.

Enchanted Evening, For True

WIND-UP of the Clark Cliffords' magnificent Anderson House reception honoring the Vice President and Mrs. Barkley was tremendous fun. The President and Mrs. Truman stayed for over an hour, greeting friends in the long gallery. Then, after eight, when only one hundred or so guests remained, things started really humming.

Downstairs the younger element were dancing; upstairs the more static refreshed themselves. Suddenly, a Romeo and Juliet tableau evolved. The Vice President, chatting on the ballroom balcony, was spotted by Mrs. Barkley and diva Rosa Ponselle standing below. Rosa signalled the orchestra, linked arms with the Veep's bride, then sang "Some Enchanted Evening." Later, the orchestra stilled, she played her own accompaniment to "Ava Maria," one of Ponselle's favorite songs.

Dancing continued, and the Vice President stepped onto the floor, twirling with sure, snappy footwork. A point of etiquette arose, was settled immediately. It would never do to have the Vice President cut in on different ladies. So the ladies reversed, leapear-wise—and cut in on him! And was Barkley a belle!

a few of the giddy round of parties staged for the newlyweds.

This Will Top Them All

SPEAKING of parties, after the Morris Cafritz' February 3 soiree, there'll be a party to end all parties for the Barkleys. It's to be given February 6 by members of the Women's National Democratic Club. Absolutely everything is going to be super-super and decorations will be out of this world.

To give a small idea of the floral magnificence in store—orchids will be flown in from California, camellias from the South, while Mrs. Claude Pepper is personally supervising a shipment of one hundred dozen gladiolas from that opulent State, Florida!

Heading up all this excitement will be Mrs. Clinton Anderson, Mrs. Clifford Davis, Mrs. Estes Kefauver and Mrs. A. S. M. Monroney, while Mrs. J. Borden Harriman and Mrs. Tom Connally will chairmen a committee for inviting distinguished guests. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, of course, will be one of the stars. The way to get asked to this gorgeous jamboree is to know a member of the club—they're allowed to ask their friends. Don't miss it—it'll be something to tell any and all future grandchildren!

Governor Turner Takes Bow

THOUGH this space has been privileged to meet only a handful of State Governors, for our money the one with the most all-around appeal is Roy Turner of Oklahoma.

Immensely successful as cattle and oilman, he's almost painfully modest, keeps his voice keyed low, listens more than he talks. But he does talk, his sincere sense of dedication to country and home State is inspiring as it is reassuring.

The Governor, who drops in regularly on Washington, was honor guest at a Tuesday cocktail party by Carlene Roberts, the smart Oklahoma pocket-size Venus, who's vice-president of American Airlines. Governor Turner, who composes music and writes lyrics, sat down at the piano, after most of the guests had left to play and sing his latest song. Mr. Turner, incidentally, wore one of the best looking tobacco brown suits ever seen in these parts.

Silver Tea to Benefit Normandy Town

MRS. WILLIAM CORCORAN EUSTIS will give a silver tea today at her Georgetown home for the benefit of Vire, a Normandy town which was destroyed by American bombs in June, 1944. The tea is sponsored by the St. Matthew's Committee of which the Right Rev. John K. Cartwright is honorary chairman, and Mrs. Eustis is chairman.

At the table for prizes will be Countess de Boisselin and Madame De Margerie of the French Embassy. In charge of donations are Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge, Mrs. Archibald Alexander, Mrs. James J. Wadsworth, Mrs. Lauriston Hardin, Mrs. James P. Hendrick, Mrs. G. T. Emmet and Mrs. Eugene Carusi. Mrs. Charles Dewey and Mrs. Peter Dewey will be at the small sales table.

Mrs. Corcoran Thom, Mrs. Robert Walsh and Mrs. Lee Warren will take their turn serving tea and others who will preside will be Mrs. Raymond Tartiere, Mrs. Daniel W. Bell, Mrs. William Arnold, Mrs. C. P. Cabell, Mrs. Edward Brooks, Miss Mary Sheridan, Countess de Marenche and Mrs. George Scriven. Mrs. Alan Pargellin, Miss Katharine Hooker, Mrs. J. J. Edwards and Miss Jean Summerlin will be assistant hostesses. At the door to collect donations will be Mrs. Robert Dunlap, Mrs. David E. Finley, Mrs. George Erwin and Miss Alice Dodge.

Mimosa Frames Australia Day Buffet

By Elizabeth Maguire

TYPICALLY Australian were the mimosa blossoms and crayfish tails at the embassy luncheon held yesterday in celebration of Australia Day. Guests included well over 100 diplomats and officials and their wives, invited by the Ambassador from "down under" and Mrs. Makin to have luncheon with them buffet style.

The bright yellow mimosa blossoms which centered the buffet are the national flower of Australia, and the crayfish tails served as the main dish are known as the Australian lobster. There's a roaring traffic, they say, in crayfish tails, which are flown every week from Australia and sold along the Eastern seacoast from New York to Atlanta.

Yesterday's luncheon also included New England turkey, Virginia ham, salads, fruits and various cakes baked in the embassy kitchen. Some had lunch and chats around the buffet, but the warm sun tempted quite a few to balance plates on the terrace outdoors.

Guests included the Ambassador of Great Britain and Lady Franks, the Ambassador of France and Mme. Bonnet, the Ambassador of Belgium, Baron Silvercrus, the Ambassador of Norway and Mrs. Munthe de Morgenstjerne, the Ambassador of Italy and Signora Tarchiani, the Ambassador of Sweden and Mme. Boheman, the Ambassador of the Union of South Africa and Mme. Jooste, and many other top diplomats and their wives.

From the State Department came the Deputy Undersecretary and Mrs. Dean Rusk, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Willard Thorp, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. George McGhee, Chief of Protocol and Mrs. Stanley Woodward and others. Duties at Capitol Hill, for the most part, prevented Senators and Congressmen from attending.

An investiture ceremony was held at noon in the drawing room of the embassy when the Ambassador, on behalf of the Australian government, bestowed the Commander of the Order of the British Empire on Maj. Gen. Clovis Byers, USA, and the Officer of the Order of the British Empire on Col. William Townsend of the Australian Military Services.

Indian Official Celebrates Republic
INDIA became a Republic yesterday, and her Ambassador to Washington, Mme. Pandit was in New Delhi for the historic occasion. Here at the embassy, the Charge d'Affaires and Mme. Sen held a reception from 6 to 8 p. m. for members of diplomatic and official society.

Spring flowers in yellow and white were placed around the drawing room, and the French windows opened wide onto the terrace where many of the guests gathered for cocktails. Mme. Sen wore a Banaras sari of purple and gold, and the gathering was further enriched with many other saris in colors of deep blue, emerald green, gold, silver and pastels.

Top diplomats and officials and their wives numbered nearly 300. The popular host and hostess said farewell to many of them, as they are leaving the middle of next month for Rome, Italy, where Dr. Sen will serve as Ambassador for his country.

Portuguese Ambassador Saying His Farewell

WASHINGTON is about to lose one of its best-looking diplomats. The Ambassador of Portugal, Pedro Theotonic Pereira, is leaving in a week or so for Lisbon, and yesterday he invited some 800 friends in to say farewell. He has been away from his country for 14 years, only two and half of these having been spent in Washington. Assisting the Ambassador to receive yesterday were the Counselor, Manuel Rocheta who serves as Charge d'Affaires in the absence of an ambassador, and his wife, Senhora de Rocheta. Members of diplomatic official and residential society attended the reception.

SENIORITA MINERVA BERNARDINO, newly appointed Minister of the Dominican Republic to U. N., was hostess at a farewell luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower for Senora de Feliz, wife of Col. Frank Feliz, retiring Military Attaché of the Dominican Embassy.

Other guests were Senora de Cohn, wife of the Minister-Counselor of the Dominican Embassy; Senora de Bernardino, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of the Dominican Republic in Cuba; Mrs. Ellen Woodward, Senora Amalia de Castillo Ledon, chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women; Mrs. Jerre Boggs, Senora de Contreras, wife of the Counselor of the Dominican Embassy; .

Mary Haworth's Mail

Married Two Years, Couple Fights Fiercely Much of the Time; Man Has Violent Temper and Help-Seeking Wife Admits She's No Angel

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been married two years and can honestly say that the only times I've been completely happy were on my first and second honeymoons. When Bill and I are home (we live with his mother) we don't agree on anything. We are always fighting and three different times we came to blows, as a result of which I would pack up and go home to my mother.

Later Bill would come to me crying, saying he was sorry and it wouldn't happen again. At these times his mother would tell me not to go housekeeping with him as he might kill me, because he has a very violent temper. However, on the rare occasions when we aren't fighting he is wonderful to me, kind in every way.

I know I am no angel and can be pretty mean myself when in the mood, and my brother says all my troubles with Bill are my fault, that I antagonize him until he gets so mad he wants to sock me right and left. My father left us when I was quite small (so was my brother) and mother worked hard to provide for us. She never told us what to do, consequently I always did as I pleased; and now the business of taking orders just doesn't agree with me.

Wife's Relatives Like Her Husband
ALL MY RELATIVES like Bill, and all say that our fights are my fault. On our wedding day, my father told Bill that he loved him like a son, but he also warned him he was never to hurt me, or he (my father) would kill him. That may sound strange to you, but I know what truth is in it.

After my last fight with Bill I called my uncle to get my father's address and my uncle advised me not to complain to my father; he said I would regret it as long as I lived. I know if I did complain to father he probably would kill Bill, for in his own way he has always watched over me especially, as I was his pet.

Bill's mother is completely nice and kind, but I think my first mistake was in going to live there. Now I have a chance to start housekeeping but I don't know whether to risk it. Bill and I have been getting on fairly well recently and he has tried not to hit me since the last time I left him, but when he is mad we sometimes go for weeks without speaking. Should I "call quits" while we are young enough to forget; or should I try our luck at housekeeping? I've tried to decide this alone and cannot. Please help me. F. B.

Man and Wife Are Much Alike
DEAR F. B.: I don't agree with your brother's claim that your troubles with Bill are all your fault. Any man who uses his fists to settle an argument, especially with his wife when his temper is hot, and who repeatedly resorts to this type of persuasion, is still in diapers psychologically. He is colossally unready to step into double harness, because at every bump in the road or jerk on the reins he is going to set up a howl, lose his head and start giving his sidekick a bad time until his hostile reactions simmer down.

However, it seems to me that you and Bill are two of a kind, with very much the same list of shortcomings and no doubt a lot in common on the good side also, if only you knew how to develop that good in your own and each other's nature. But alas, the rub is that when one begins to fret, the other gets tough. I suppose—this being your customary defense against criticism (his, too)—and then it's a battle to show who can act toughest and deal the most hurt.

Such behavior signifies great distress of personality, also dark ignorance of how to help oneself, how to get on the beam that leads to expanding happiness in intimate exchange. It is a pitiful attempt to sustain emotional communication when love is (or seems to be) absent from a relationship on which one feels dependent for vital security.

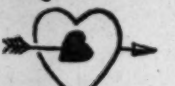

Emotionally Sick, Completely Stymied
YOU SAY you are no angel and can be pretty mean when in the mood—and that, I gather, is when you feel (unconsciously) bereft of protective sympathy, and are savagely "taking out" on someone in your path your bitter dissatisfaction with nearly everything that's happened to you thus far. Not realizing, of course, that you could vastly improve the quality of your experiences if first you changed yourself for the better.

More recently you've been doting yourself imaginatively with fantasies of your father's being your own private Superman and dragon slayer—due to the threat he voiced on your wedding day. All of which indicates that you are emotionally sick, desperately anxious and completely stymied—and it's no wonder you can't decide what to do about your marriage. You urgently need skilled firsthand help to "get right" with yourself, before you take on more responsibilities—and my advice is to search out a clergyman who will guide you to a really good family relations counselor in your city.

Where to Buy Raviolas, Cheese

Can you tell me if and where raviolas (cheese stuffing) and Scamozza cheese for pizzas can be bought here?
F. W.

Several local shops carry these supplies for making Italian dishes. The telephone number of one located on Morse st. n.e., is Trinidad 9323. Another, on Georgia ave. n.w., can be reached by telephoning Georgia 0698.

PIZZA VARIATION
Dough:
3 tablespoons shortening
1 1/2 cups sifted flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 to 2/3 cup milk

1 pound pure pork sausage meat
1/4 teaspoon thyme
1/2 clove garlic
1 cup shredded cheese
1 cup drained cooked whole tomatoes

Make a biscuit dough with the first five ingredients. Knead six times. Roll out to fit into a 9-inch shallow cake pan.

Brown sausage meat in skillet. Pour off drippings. Add thyme and minced garlic, then spread meat mixture over biscuit dough. Cover with cheese, then top with tomatoes. Bake in hot oven (450 degrees) about 25 minutes or until biscuit is baked. Serve hot, cut into wedges, for luncheon or supper dish. This recipe serves six.

We need help! We're moving into our new home next month and would like to have a housewarming. How do we go about it? Are written invitations necessary, and what would be suitable for refreshments? Are the guests expected to bring gifts?
V. J.

There are almost as many different kinds of housewarmings one might have as there are houses. However, the tone of such a party is generally gay and informal.

If you'd like as many friends as possible to see your new quarters, you might have an open house—say between the hours of 5 and 7 in the afternoon or 8 to 10 in the evening. For refreshments, you could have punch, (or tea and coffee), little sandwiches and cakes, nuts, and candies—the sort of food that can be served from a buffet as guests come and go.

Invitations could be telephoned or written on some of the pretty little fold-over cards now sold at stationery counters. Guests aren't expected to bring gifts to such a party, but sometimes do.

We moved into a new house and already a child has left his fingerprints on the wall-paper. What can I do to try and remove them? Can I put anything, such as cellophane, around the archways to prevent further marks?
E. M.

Often, you can remove such marks with the dough type of wall-paper cleaner, sold in most house-

ware departments and paint stores. If the spot left by the fingers is quite greasy, you may have to resort to a poultice treatment.

Mix Fuller's earth or cornstarch with carbon tetrachloride to a soft paste and apply to spot on wall, thinning it out near the edges. As it dries, it will absorb the grease. Remove later with a soft brush.

Houseware's sections of department and even 5-and-10-cent stores sell "wall guards" of thin clear plastic that can be fastened to the wall in places where spotting is likely.

We should like to replace the worn rush seats of two antique chairs. My husband wants to do the job himself if he can obtain the necessary rush or a fiber substitute. Can you direct me to a firm handling such materials?
M. Y. S.

I do not know of anyone here in Washington selling real rush. However, you can get imitation rush from at least one local company (National 3621). This seems to be what is generally used nowadays and it looks very much like real rush when the job is completed. Usually, the seats are covered with a coat of white shellac for extra protection and finish.

I would appreciate your giving me detailed instructions on how to make a bed properly.
S. L. H.

Here's a step-by-step outline of how to achieve a really well-made bed—one that is comfortable and won't always be pulling loose and letting in cold air.

- (1) Spread mattress pad smooth.
- (2) Spread bottom sheet right side up, even and straight, with center crease exactly in center of bed and wide hem at top.
- (3) Tuck sheet in at head and foot of bed.
- (4) Make "hospital" or mitered corners on all four corners. Do this by picking up edge of sheet about 15 inches from foot of bed, lifting up into a diagonal fold, then laying fold on mattress. Tuck the part of the sheet that is left hanging, under the mattress. Then drop the diagonal fold, pull smooth and tuck under mattress. Be sure sheet is smooth.
- (5) Spread top sheet right side down, even and straight, with wide hem at top.
- (6) Tuck sheet in at foot. Make mitered corners at foot only.
- (7) Spread blankets on, one at a time. Tuck in at foot, mitering corners. Tuck in at sides and turn top sheet down over blankets.
- (8) If desired, spread third sheet or blanket cover over blankets, mitering corners and tucking in sides.

Ghosts Give Way to Furniture Display in Old Manse

A FAMOUS OLD HOUSE—silent the past few years save for the uneasy footsteps of an occasional ghost—will be this area's newest furniture store.

It's the Blair-Lee house, Maryland edition. Built by Francis Preston Blair, member of President Jackson's "Kitchen Cabinet," it was his country home and the original "Silver Spring" for which that Maryland town was named. The P. J. Nee Co. has leased and restored it to show "traditional furniture in a traditional setting." It opened to the public yesterday.

The world has come galloping almost to the door of old "Silver Spring" since it was built around 1842. Apartment houses, filling stations and shopping centers surround it, but the 29-room mansion has clung tenaciously to a sizeable strip of its lawn, its holly hedge, boxwood, magnolia and pine trees.

The Nees have done a beautiful job of restoring the rambling, thick-walled house. It's of white-painted brick with iron grillwork trim. Inside, to quote manager Robert Craig, the arrangement makes it a "cross between a furniture store and a home."

In the dining room, you'll find dining room furniture. Ditto for living and drawing rooms, bedrooms and nursery. True, there's a bit more furniture than you'd find in a home, but the arrangement still gives you a wonderful chance to see just how these fine antique reproductions are going to look in a traditional setting.

Even the kitchen—with its 6-foot-wide fireplace—will be furnished the old-fashioned way. But next to it there will be a room where the most modern kitchen equipment will be shown.

Colorful Life Coming Up

SPEAKING of interior decorating, seems you're going to live a colorful life in the near future.

Color—loud and lavishly used—key-noted nearly all the exhibits in the annual Home Furnishings Show in Chicago recently.

The moderns had the most of it, but even traditional furniture ruled out monotonous tones. Magentas, reds, blues, greys and yellows brightened the picture everywhere.

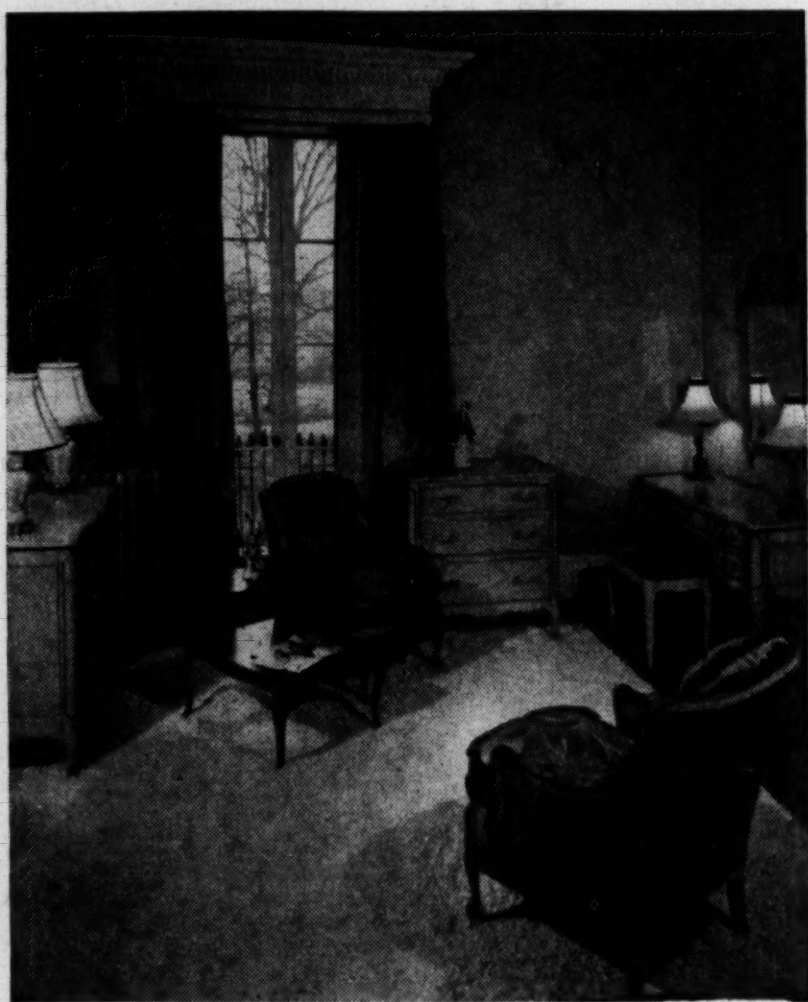

Ranch House on Rise

THE RISE of the ranch house is going to have a big effect on decorating this year, they say.

At the Chicago Home Furnishings Show, it was reflected in nubby weaves, outdoor prints and colors, furniture detail and more drawer space.

Traditional furnishings got a good play at the show, too, though. Chippendale and Sheraton were in the lead, with Georgian coming third.

Some of the old-fashioned things were scaled down to fit our tight modern houses. One firm, for instance, showed a "love chair" in Robin Hood green, a compromise between a wing-back chair and a love seat. Another name for this new piece is "mother-and-daughter" chair, a cozy place for the two to sit and read by the fire. LUCIA BROWN

THROUGH this corniced French window, Francis Preston Blair once looked out over the broad acres of "Silver Spring." Today, the bedroom in the old house is part of the new Nee furniture store, but it is still furnished as a bedroom would be with lovely antique reproductions.

Washington Red Cross Needs Recreation Aides in Hospitals

By Nicha Soure

A WASHINGTON woman's few idle hours a week are a precious commodity to the Red Cross.

The District Red Cross Arts and Skills Service has sent out an urgent appeal for 30 volunteer trainees to work in wards of Federal hospitals in the area. Classes will begin on February 6. Interviews for interested persons can be slated any week day by making an appointment through Mrs. Bruce H. Roberts, chairman, at Republic 8300, extension 762.

"Trainees will be given special Red Cross instruction in the skills they can take to the hospitals. Not only patients welcome this instruction. Hospitals are equally anxious for this form of recreational therapy. It plays an important role in the recovery of long-term patients," Mrs. Roberts said.

There is no charge for the training course opened by the Red Cross Arts and Skills Service. However, each person who takes it is asked to pledge either a day or half a day a week in a hospital. Volunteers may serve in Walter Reed General Hospital, Mount Alto Veterans' Administration Hospital, United States Soldiers' Home Hospital, Bolling Field, Home for Incurables and House of Mercy.

The Chevy Chase branch of the Montgomery County Chapter of Red Cross also needs volunteers to fold dressings. This chapter meets on the first Thursday morning of each month from 10 a. m. to noon in the Chevy Chase Methodist Church, Connecticut ave. and Shepherd st.

Mrs. L. Vaughan Bowly, chairman of the surgical dressings, has invited interested persons to attend the meetings.

Mrs. James T. Berryman, chairman of the residential unit for the 1950 metropolitan area Red Cross drive, has announced that Mrs. J. Blaise de Sibour will assist her as vice chairman of the unit.

The six district chairmen within the residential unit are Mrs. Frank Wisner, William E. Kingswell, Mrs. C. L. Buxton, Arthur J. Shaffer, Mrs. Elizabeth Emmons and Howard A. Nessen.

One on the Aisle—Auschwitz 'Story' A Shattering Film

By Richard L. Coe

THAT OUR BUMBLING world sometimes is inflicted with a ghastly insanity in certain areas is too much a part of our lives to surprise us. But that time and science have now given us the experience on a widely distributed record for all to see is a comparatively recent matter. The fact can become a shock.

Such a record of human insanity is "The Last Stop," a Polish film now at the Dupont. Because it coldly shows us how four and a half million people were destroyed under the promise of creating a new era, it is as ghastly a film as has ever been shown under commercial sponsorship.

Although reenacted on ground of similar actual suffering, written, produced and directed by a former inmate of a concentration camp, Wanda Jakubowska, and employing actors of the Polish stage, "The Last Stop" is admittedly not a newsreel of the Nazis' dreadful doings. It is, to a certain extent, fictionalized, compressed.

But its events are as real as the stories revealed during the Nuernberg trials and its characters are based on actual people known to the author and documented by history's record.

The effect of this unbelievable sadism on the viewer is, of course, shattering. But the questions of whether such a picture should be shown and whether it will be of interest to mature people is answered, it seems to me, by humanity's record. Of course it should be shown and seen. It is a picture for all mankind to ponder.

We are simply shown a few people in Auschwitz, not only Poles, but peoples from all over Europe. We see them in this miserable camp. We watch the Germans carefully frame an acceptable barracks for an international commission to inspect—and approve. We see how human beings, by the thousands, are carted off to the gas chambers so that more room can be made in the camp for other of the victor's captives.

Unforgettable. And we watch how an attempt to obliterate the ghastly place as a record was thwarted by some brave souls who felt that this inhumanity must be shown to the world. That these camps were not obliterated by guilt-feeling Germans and was finally shown to the world by our advancing armies must be deemed one of the advances of civilization. For this is a record which can affect all our futures.

That the film comes to us from Poland should create no question as to its authenticity or intent. The Nuernberg records back up every scene of "The Last Stop" and it is surely perfectly correct that both sides of the Iron Curtain should have this record of a nation which has been so determined to despoil the earth.

Technically, "The Last Stop" may not be your idea of cinematic perfection, but in its blunt insistence on telling its story it has a passionate vigor. The impact of these scores of incidents, welded by Mne. Jakubowska and her staff into a little less than two screen hours, forms an unforgettable film.

Another new arrival is "The Nevada," at the Metropolitan. The title should tell you much about it and the star's name. Randolph Scott, should elucidate further. It's in Cinecolor, has Dorothy Malone for its leading lady and this week's visitor, Forrest Tucker, topping the supporting cast.

THE CAPITOL, beginning next week, will change its opening day to Wednesday during the month of February. Which unfortunately cuts down the run of "Intruder in the Dust," corks fine film in tomorrow's review, but it does seem highly thoughtless of Metro to make so great a picture as the Faulkner story truly is and then to limit its possible appreciation period to the shortest run of the year. Don't fail to catch "Intruder in the Dust."

MRS. JOHN F. HORTON may no longer be Drucie Snyder after yesterday's Cathedral wedding, but as Miss Snyder she'll be proudly remembered for her radio programs about the theaterless Washington. Long life to the Hortons!

THE CIRCLE Theater, handy haunt of the GW student body, has redone itself, now boasting freshly painted walls, new fabrics and those Bodiform chairs that are getting to be a must for the up-to-snuff palazzo. Louise Herbert's landmark has had many a redoing, but Manager Harry Bachman vows this is the best yet.

VALERIE WARDE's Dupont Circle Drama School will present an evening of one-act plays next Tuesday night in the Cafritz Auditorium, 16th and Q sts. Youngsters from 7 to 16 will play scenes from "As You Like It," "The Tenth Word," "Wildcat Willie Gets Brain Fever" and "Accidentally Yours."

KEITH's would stop the presses to tell you that "Stromboli," The Ingrid Bergman-Roberto Rossellini dramatic film, will be there Wednesday, February 15. This was previewed the other night in Long Beach, Calif., for people who thought they were going to see Hopalong Cassidy, cowboys and Indians in "False Paradise." Brilliant way to test a pitch, huh?

OLD ACQUAINTANCES: Gloria Swanson chucks Anna Q. Nilsson under the chin as H. B. Warner looks on during current filming on the Paramount lot. Miss Swanson is the star of "Sunset Boulevard," the story of a silent screen star's comeback a generation later, and both Miss Nilsson and Warner, stars of the old days, appear in her support. Warner is famed for his playing of Christ in "The King of Kings."

AS GENE KLAVIN of WTOP finishes his engagement at the Cairo Hotel's Royal Palm Room, another disc jockey, Milton Q. Ford, takes over.

But Ford will not be alone in the spotlight. Richard, radio's only talking parrot (with Ford on WWDC), will share it.

In addition to handling the Cairo's emcee spot, Ford and Richard have worked up what they call an original comedy routine. It's rumored Ford stole his material from Milton Berle while Richard glommed his from the latest birdseed catalog.

Ford's main reaction to this new step in his career: "It's a pleasure losing my amateur standing." He has appeared publicly so often in Washington we'd assumed he'd lost it long ago. But this is his first paying engagement outside of radio.

Richard could not be reached for a statement.

Sammy Ferro, well known for his lively trio work on Les Sand's WTTG show, brought a five-piece band in last night. Marion Klati stays for her third week, as does George Stribbling, a "romantic troubadour." Marion has an outstanding lyric soprano voice and really knows her music. Magician's act is handled by Jim Spear. Judy Lee and her Royal Palmettes (six girls with a chorus routine) remain.

INTERNATIONAL in music, cuisine and personnel is Michel's, the gypsy and classical music stronghold on Vermont ave. Michel himself is Lithuanian, cymbalist Moscovici is Russian.

Paper Is Made From Waste Of Sugar Cane

Holyoke, Mass., Jan. 26 (P).—The manufacture of newsprint and book paper from sugar cane waste was announced today by three concerns working on the process.

The Holyoke Transcript will print a special edition tomorrow on the newly-developed newsprint while on Saturday more of the newsprint will be produced at a paper mill as a test run for observers from many countries.

The announcement of the new method of making newsprint was made jointly by the Kinsley Chemical Co. of Cleveland, Ohio, the Noble and Wood Co. of Hoosick Falls, N. Y., and the Chemical Paper Manufacturing Co. of Holyoke.

Joseph G. Weimer, spokesman for the concerns, said E. R. Tinslow, technical director of the Kinsley Co., developed the process, the Noble and Wood Co. contributed the machinery, and the Holyoke concern manufactured the paper from the pulp.

Weimer said the newsprint and book paper is made from bleached pulp produced from bagasse, the waste of sugar cane. The actual process for making the paper was not divulged.

Weimer said that observers expected to be present for the test run manufacture of the new newsprint include representatives for the governments of Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Colombia, Mexico, Cuba, Santo Domingo, Haiti, Australia, India, Pakistan and South Africa.

Weimer, who directs the international activities of the Kinsley Co., told newsmen he will become president of a subsidiary company which will develop bagasse operations domestically and in foreign countries.

1 Voter in Six Sees F. D. R., Jr. Now on Road to White House

By George Gallup

Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 26.—Of the two politically active Roosevelt brothers, James and Franklin D. jr.—Franklin D. has the brighter political future ahead of him, in the opinion of voters questioned throughout the Nation in a survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

One voter in six even sees young Franklin taking up residence in the White House some day.

Franklin Roosevelt is now a freshman in Congress, and there is some talk that he might be persuaded to run for Governor of New York, though he himself has denied having any such plan.

His elder brother, a power in Democratic politics in California, has thrown his hat into the ring for Governor of that State.

A few commentators have seen the Roosevelt brothers as engaged in a friendly "race" for the White House or at least for power in the national councils of the Democratic Party.

To see how the country rates the political future of the two, interviewers for the institute put this question to all voters:

"From what you have heard or read, which one of the two Roosevelt sons would you say has the greatest political future ahead of him—James or Franklin D. jr.?"

The results:

James Roosevelt 21%
Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr. 40%
Don't know 39%

Here is the way the vote divided by parties:

Republi- Demo- In-cans crats de-
James .18% 21% 26%

Franklin 39 42 40
Don't know 43 37 34
100% 100% 100%

Although Franklin is given the edge in all sections of the country in the survey, James' strongest vote comes from people west of the Mississippi. The largest vote for Franklin comes from the South.

Only a fifth of the Republicans in the survey think that either James or Franklin will ever reach the White House. But a third of the Democrats, looking in their crystal ball, see one or the other following in their father's footsteps in Washington.

The survey asked:

"Do you yourself think either one will ever be elected President of the United States?"

Here is the national vote:

James 8%
Franklin 16 27%
Both 3
No 50
No opinion 23
100%

'This I Remember'

Roosevelt 'Really Liked' Stalin, Was Confident of Soviet Accord

This is another installment of the serialization of "This I Remember," the collection of stories by Franklin D. Roosevelt's secretary, from 1934 to his death in 1945. Serial installments will be printed in The Washington Post through February 4.

By Eleanor Roosevelt

AMONG other guests in 1942 were Prime Minister Mackenzie King and President and Madame Quezon. In May Foreign Minister Molotov came, accompanied by his interpreter, Mr. Pavlov. I was not at home when they arrived, so Mr. Molotov was given a stag dinner, but the following morning he came into my sitting room with Mr. Pavlov to have a talk with me. He talked about social reforms in his country and in mine, and he hoped that I would some day soon visit the USSR.

I had already been told of an incident which had caused some quiet amusement. One of the White House valets was quite astounded when he unpacked Mr. Molotov's bag to find a large chunk of black bread, a roll of sausage and a pistol. The Secret Service did not like visitors with pistols, but on this occasion nothing was said. Mr. Molotov evidently thought he might have to defend himself and that he might also be hungry.

Mr. Churchill was with us again from the 21st to the 25th of June. The friendship and affection between my husband and Mr. Churchill grew with every visit and was something quite apart from the official intercourse. It was evident that Great Britain and the United States would have to cooperate in any case, but the war could be carried on to better advantage with the two nations closely united through the personal friendship of Mr. Churchill and my husband.

The two men had many interests in common in addition to the paramount issue of the war. They were men who loved the sea and the navy. They both knew a great deal of history, and they had somewhat similar tastes in literature. It always gave my husband great joy whenever Mr. Churchill recited aptly from Lear's nonsense rhymes, which were among Franklin's favorites. Both of them had read much biography. My husband did not have the same interest in art, but both of them loved the out-of-doors and could enjoy themselves either in the country or in the city. Their companionship grew, I think, with their respect for one another's ability. They did not agree on all things; I heard my husband make remarks which were completely inspired by annoyance and occasionally by a realistic facing of facts.

Irritated

I REMEMBER very well his irritation at Churchill's determination that we should attack through Greece and the Balkans. Franklin said that would mean the loss of many men, though strategically it might be a help to Great Britain and get us to Berlin before the Russians. However, he did not think it was important, and he was not going to risk that number of men.

I do not mean that there were not many times when they suffered. I saw it in Mr. Churchill's face. I remember that on D-Day especially Franklin was tense waiting for news. Even then, the only thing he said was: "I wonder how Linna will come out." Mr. Linna was a retired naval officer of World War I, who had worked for my husband on his three plane-landings and was now back in the Navy. He commanded one of the landing craft on D-Day.

Franklin knew and understood Mr. Churchill. He seemed to agree when I said, on one occasion, that I thought the hardest time for Mr. Churchill would come after the war. Mr. Churchill had acknowledged to me in casual conversation that he knew the world would never be the same.

Hard for Winston

IN answer to my statement Franklin said: "You are right. It will be hard for Winston, and I am sure that in some ways it will be easier to make Mr. Stalin understand certain things after the war is over."

My husband often said that he felt sure Mr. Churchill would retire from office soon after the war ended. I took this to mean that Franklin expected that he and Mr. Churchill and Mr. Stalin would still be in office for a short time after the war and have something to say about the policies laid down. He felt that Mr. Churchill might find it very difficult to adapt to new conditions, but a remark made by Mr. Stalin to Franklin in their talks stayed in his mind. I think it gave him hope that there might after the war be more flexibility in communism, at least in this particular leader of a Communist country, than we without it, and the two men might not have gone through it so well if they had not had that personal pleasure in their meetings and their confidence in one another's integrity and ability.

The day before Mr. Churchill left, King Peter of Yugoslavia came to the White House. Later Franklin said to me: "That young man should forget that he is a king and go to work. In the long run he would be better off." I think of that now when I see him with his wife and child. Waiting around for a throne is not really a very satisfactory business.

Hopkins Married

IN the month of June we began to see a good deal of Louise Macy; and finally Harry Hopkins told me—he had already told Franklin—that he was going to be married to Louise. He said that Franklin had asked them both to live at the White House and asked me how I would feel about it. Of course, I felt I had to talk it over with my husband. Franklin said finally that the most important thing in the world at that time was the conduct of the war, and it was absolutely necessary that Harry be in the house. That settled that; and I want to say here that Louise managed what must have been a difficult situation extraordinarily well.

In August we had our first visit from Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands. My press conference ladies waited very much to meet her, and though I was doubtful whether it could be managed, she did attend my press conference the morning after her arrival. When it was over I accompanied her to the Capitol; then we met my husband and went to the ceremony marking the transfer of an American subchaser to the Netherlands fleet.

Liked Stalin

FRANKLIN felt that this would happen also in Great Britain but that perhaps Mr. Churchill might find some of these developments difficult to accept. I do not think Franklin ever thought that understanding with the USSR would be easy, though he had a real liking for Marshal Stalin himself. When he really liked someone he was apt to believe that the impossible might be made to happen.

My husband had great confidence in his ability to understand others and make them understand our motives and the needs and realities of a situation. I think one of his reasons for being willing to meet with the heads of other nations outside the country, when they were unwilling to come here, was his feeling that he could convince them better by personal contact than by letter or telephone.

I shall never cease to be grateful to Mr. Churchill for his leadership during the war; his speeches were a tonic to us here in his own people. The real affection which he had for my husband, and which was reciprocated, has apparently never lost. It was his feeling that he could convince them better by personal contact than by letter or telephone.

the first to be made. We were luxuriously taken care of and had only one piece of excitement on the way, when we were allowed to look down on a convoy below us—little tiny specks on the ocean.

Hit Bad Weather

THE FIRST bad weather we encountered was in Foyines, Ireland. We had expected to transfer there from one plane to another and continue on to London, but as we landed on the water a small boat came out from shore, and we were told that our flight had been canceled because of weather. It was pouring rain, and as we transferred from the plane to the open boat to go ashore I realized that my raincoat and umbrella were stowed away in my bags in the wings of the plane. The hat that I had bought for the trip was ruined, and I looked a bit bedraggled when we reached land.

Before I Left the United States

Harry Hopkins had told me not to pay much attention to Mr. Winant but to be sure to consult Averell Harriman on everything. I had known Mr. Winant for a long time, and I had great respect and admiration for him, as did my husband. I firmly determined, however, that I would consult Mr. Winant and take his advice. I was sure that Averell Harriman would not have agreed with Harry, because he was in London and knew what a wonderful reputation Mr. Winant enjoyed with the British officials.

When Mr. Winant met us I was relieved of many anxieties. On the train we went over the proposed itinerary. I thought it was a bit strenuous, but later it was expanded to include much that I had never dreamed of doing at first. Mr. Winant told me that the itinerary had been gone over by the Queen and by Lady Stella Reading, who was to take and charming couple who would have to undergo some very difficult experiences—returned to me. It was intensified now, however, by the realization that they had already been through many of these experiences and were anxious to tell me about them. In all my contacts with them, I have gained the great respect for both the King and Queen. I have always agreed with the ideas expressed to me by the King on international subjects, but no one can deny that both of them are doing an extraordinarily outstanding job for their people in the most trying times. And their character and devotion to duty is admirable.

Taft Pulls Teeth of T-H Report

By Drew Pearson

GOP Senator Bob Taft has just shown himself a real miracle worker—this time by pulling wires inside the Democratic Party.

Taft, considered by some people to be the arch-enemy of labor, would be the last person expected to dictate a Democratic report on the Taft-Hartley Act. But that is essentially what he did behind closed doors of the Senate Labor Committee.

Though the Democrats have the votes to say what they please in any Senate Labor report, Taft managed to milk the vinegar out of a Senate report criticizing the Taft-Hartley law.

Word by word, comma by comma, the Democrats gave in to Taft until he slashed the original 49-page report critical of his T-H Act down to 16 pages that weren't critical at all. All that is now left is an outline for future investigation, written in gentle Sunday school language.

Two Democratic Senators, Jim Murray of Montana and Mat Neely of West Virginia, put up a fight against Taft. But even they backed down in order not to antagonize Republican support for a $135,000 appropriation to continue investigating labor-management relations.

Taft scrutinized each word in the report and knocked out almost everything that displeased him. For example, he deleted the black face phrases in the following sentences: "Public policy is committed to the preservation and encouragement of collective bargaining as a pillar of real economy," and "the use and effect of injunctions as a disruptive influence in labor-management relations."

Another significant statement that didn't show up in the Taft-censored version was this criticism of Taft's T-H Act: "It is also asserted that since the passage of this (Taft-Hartley) act there has been a pronounced access of legalism in labor-management relations, making the solution of problems more complex, difficult and expensive and throwing increasingly large numbers of cases into the hands of lawyers, arbitrators and governmental agencies."

In short, Taft struck out all the hostile references to the Taft-Hartley Act from a Democratic report that Truman planned to use against him in the coming campaign. It was like being given the privilege of removing the bullets from a gun that will be used to fire at you.

Peron Graves Opposition

Dictator Juan Peron of Argentina has privately advised his close political cronies that he wants to see the formation this year of a new "opposition" party against him, but by elements of his own following.

The glib Peron summoned a dozen of his top henchmen to a secret conference at his Buenos Aires home the night of January 2. Among them were Interior Secretary Angel Borlenghi; Admiral Alberto Tessaire, floor leader of the all-Peronist Senate; and Carlos Visca, a federal deputy who heads the congressional "committee on anti-Argentine activities."

Peron informed the group that the "old political gangs" (Argentina's long-established Conservative, Radical and Socialist Parties) were now "effectively decimated and thoroughly discredited." He added that it has time to "implement my recent call for the formation of a new party of loyal opposition."

Then he sprang his surprise proposal that the so-called collaborationist radicals—a splinter faction that broke with the parent party in 1946 to support Peron—be given the task of setting up the new "opposition" party.

These men, he explained blandly, could be relied upon to found a party "whose basic aims and principles will coincide satisfactorily with our own, while at the same time providing a separate list of candidates on election day. This idea was, of course, enthusiastically received by all present, and Borlenghi and Tessaire were appointed to go about putting it into practice. Thus Peron, who always has favored giving his dictatorship a novel, personal touch, seems about to add another brand-new wrinkle: the totalitarian state under two parties with but a single thought—Peronism forever.
